King, Monkey, Dog Beware, Uncle Sam Aristocracy's Mud Bed King John and the Abbot

—By Arthur Brisbane—

(Copyright, 1920.)

Incongruous juxtaposition: in one column you see the heading, "Monkey B'tes a King," and in the next column "Hoover Attacks Wilson."

The King was Alexander of Greece. In his disaster there is a lesson for us and a warning for advocates of the Peace League, also for Uncle Sam.

The King's pet monkey was fighting the King's dog. The King's kind heart suggested that he ought to do something, so he accepted the mandate, entered the dog-monkey league of fighters and got well bitten on the hand.

Result: Two attacks of fever, intestinal complications and jaundice.

That is nothing to what Uncle Sam would undergo if he should, by an asinine League of Nations, bind himself to take part in all the dog and monkey fights that will break out in Europe, Asia and Africa.

Mr. Hoover, in his attack on Woodrow Wilson, talks plainly, and La Fontaine's kind peasant that warmed the snake in its breast, was no more startled at the snake bite, probably, than Mr. Wilson at Hoover's statement that the Wilson rule had been a flat failure. In the wash, following a war, strange things come out.

Abon-El-Hafid, once Sultan of Morocco, sends here for sale the largest diamond that ever crossed the ocean. It is light straw color, weights 183 carats, and soon will help some middle-aged American lady to repair what Athalia, daughter of Jezebel, called "the irreparable outrage of the years."

Works of art, fat diamonds, wooden linings of ancient castles and churches keep drifting here, and we ask, "Will any of this take root? Shall we some day produce some art in addition to buying it ready made and very ancient?" Certainly we shall. Don't be discouraged because financial pirates, collecting jackdaws, gather a jumble of stuff and vote themselves refined.

The Venetians were all thieves at first. They ran out on the marshes to get away from the rabbet. They built Venice and ships, got rich, collected art, first, then created. And in Voltaire's day, as he said, the oldest noble family in Europe was Venetian. That shows that you can build art and aristocracy on a muddy foundation—nothing but mud and water under Venice. We'll be artistic here some day and have our New York Medici encouraging live artists instead of merely enriching shrewd dealers. Michael Angelo, to get a start, imitated old Greek sculpture, buried it, dug it up and sold it to a cardinal.

What a brain England possesses in Lloyd George. How many Englishmen of average intelligence would you have to boil down to get a mental extract as strong as that Welshman. Refusing to Ireland dominion home rule, the same home rule as in Canada, George puts his finger at once on the danger spot—for England.

If Ireland were able to make her laws she could conscript an army of 500,000 Irishmen—that is the figure mentioned by Lloyd George. England gets along with an army of 100,000. Englishmen do not like conscription and are "fed up" on army life. If Ireland conscripted 500,000 men, England would have to do the same and then fight the 500,000 Irishmen. To that suggestion Lloyd George says, "No, thank you." Intelligent man.

Harding says that while our queer government talks idealism, England reaches out to control the world's oil supply and other business. All the oil of Mesopotamia and Persia, and the other day 200,000 more acres of Mexican oil lands. England has recently collected.

Our dressy government, so far from realities, reminds you of the bankrupt in the debtors' prison, figuring out his plan for paying off the national debt.

With Harding elected the country will have an employe aware of the fact that his first job is to bring business to his own firm, the U. S. A.

After fifty-nine days without food Lord Mayor MacSwiney is still alive. But he and the other starved men jailed in Ireland are, in fact, dead, doomed beyond hope. It is as though they had died and come back to testify for their country. If they were all set free tomorrow all would be too late. They ate food. The doctors say it is now too late for them to eat and live.

Rich men's campaign gifts must pay income tax. So Collector Edwards reminds New York's big men. Gifts to politics cannot be called "charity" and deducted from income. However, any man, rich or poor, understanding his interest and that of this country, can make no better investment than a contribution to Harding's fund and against the League of Nations. That League would cost the nation many billions. Both big and little would have to pay.

SMITH IS HOPE OF DODGERS

Brooklyn Battling With Backs Against Wall in Sixth Game

Cleveland, O., Oct. 11.—Sherrod Smith, Brooklyn's stalwart left-hander, who shut out the American League champions last Thursday at Ebbets Field, carries a heavy responsibility on his shoulders today. He stands between the Dodgers and an utter rout, for if he fails to win today, the World's Series is all over but the shouting.

Cleveland's boast of four straight victories here is no longer regarded as an idle bluff.

The Indians, when they returned here, after losing two out of three games in Brooklyn, predicted that the series would never go back to Flatbush. That prophecy probably will

SAYS FEEDING WOULD KILL MacSWINEY

London, Oct. 11.—Dr. MacFie, famous British authority on dietetics, writing in the Daily News, protests against "false reports," that Terence MacSwiney and the hunger-striking Sinn Fein prisoners at Cork are being surreptitiously fed. Dr. MacFie says that a small amount of food would hurt rather than help the prisoners. He points out that food would encourage the heart to undue exertion which would probably hasten death.

Home Building in Boston Halted

Not a permit was issued in the past week by the Building Department for a habitation of any kind, nor was any application made for one.

The sole contribution in three weeks toward the relief of the housing shortage was a small frame dwelling of five rooms in West Roxbury for which a permit was issued in mid-September.

But there is no halt in the building of garages. Ten more are to be built at a cost of approximately $13,000, making a rate of about thirty garages one house.

London, Oct. 11.—Terence MacSwiney, the hunger-striking Lord Mayor of Cork, entered the sixtieth day of his fast today after a fairly good night in the infirmary of Brixton jail.

Dublin, Oct. 11.—Two military automobile trucks carrying soldiers were attacked by armed men near Bandon.

Lieutenant Richardson, in command of the soldiers, was killed and three of his men were wounded, the casualties suffered by the civilians were not ascertainable.

Another truck carrying soldiers from Tulsk toward Castlera, was bombed and destroyed in the night. Some of the soldiers that were on it are missing.

The military raided the Rob Roy Hotel at Queenstown, where many persons waiting to come to America were stopping. Some were halted in the streets near the hotel and searched.

One in every four women will carry a torch in the Republican torchlight parade tomorrow evening. Fully 10,000 Republican women are expected to participate with an equal number of men. Fifty aides have been appointed and they will wear white Colonial capes, made of shining oilcloth, and Continental hats, in the line of march, to distinguish them.

Mrs. Alexander Smith Cochran, known on the stage as Ganna Walska.

New York, Oct. 11.—Ganna Walska said today that she would not give up the operatic stage because of her marriage to Alexander Smith Cochran, the millionaire, who built the yacht-ing cup contender, "Vanitie." Mrs. Cochran has just returned from France, where the marriage took place.

"I sing because I must," she said. "My nature craves the expression which I can give to my talents only by appearing in opera. All during my honeymoon I studied. I worked to master new roles and perfect myself in my old ones.

"Mr. Cochran doesn't object. Why should he? He knows I do not sing from vanity or because I need the money. He knows that my work is essential to my happiness.

"There are women who are on the stage to attract attention or because they want to make a livelihood. It is natural that such women should give up the stage when they marry.

"Few women who go into operatic or dramatic work because their natural gifts force them to that means of expression are ever happy if they give up their careers for marriage. Ethel Barrymore gave up the stage for a short time, but she came back."

ASSAILANT ROUTED BY WOMEN

Frank Ramey, who is in Wakefield jail charged with a brutal assault on Miss Mildred Wanamaker, was positively identified today by Miss Margaret Merrill of Lynn as the boy who attempted a similar assault on her in the same neighborhood three weeks ago.

Her identification came with crushing force to the suspect, who has stubbornly denied the attack on the Wanamaker girl.

He still protested his innocence, and said when Miss Wanamaker regained complete consciousness she would clear him.

Miss Merrill's identification did much to take away the significance of the only other development of the day in the Wanamaker case—the report that Miss Wanamaker had on several occasions muttered the word "auto" when asked concerning her mysterious assailant.

This she is known to have done. It was assumed by some of her friends

FIRES SHOTGUN AT TROLLEY

Providence Youth, Angered by Taunts, Injures Two Passengers With Small Shot

Providence, Oct. 11.—Angered at the taunts of fellow passengers on an electric car, Russell A. Potter, after alighting from the conveyance early today, fired both barrels of his shotgun at the car as it started away, wounding Cesare Mollo and Edward Cahir, who were riding in the rear vestibule.

At the Rhode Island State Hospital, surgeons extracted seven bird shot from Mollo and six from Cahir. Mrs. J. G. Roessel, another passenger on the car was treated for hysteria.

Potter, arrested today, told the police he shot at the car because he was mad on account of the passengers chiding him on his qualifications as a hunter.

Potter, who is eighteen years old and resides at No. 111 Knowles street, this city, went hunting yesterday, but failed to bag any game. When he left the car he fired his gun and the discharge, besides injuring the passengers, broke the glass of the vestibule. Several other passengers had narrow escapes as the small shot whizzed through the car.

WILSON ANSWERS SPENCER BY GIVING STENOGRAPHIC NOTES

CARLSON QUOTED TO REFUTE "MILITARY AID" CHARGE

By International News Service.

Washington, Oct. 11.—As refutation of the charge by Senator Spencer, Republican, of Missouri, that President Wilson promised Rumania and Serbia American military aid, in men and ships, during the peace conference, a transcript of a stenographic report of the President's utterances at a secret plenary session May 31, 1919, was made public today at the White House.

The President was quoted in the stenographic report, made public today by the White House, as having stated at this session:

"How can a power like the United States, for example—for I can speak for no other—after signing this treaty if it contains elements which they do not believe will be permanent, go three thousand miles away across the seas as a project to its people that [illegible] settlement of the peace of the world? It cannot do so, and yet there underlies all of these transactions the expectation on the part, for example, of Rumania, and of Czecho-Slovakia, and of Serbia, that if any covenants of this settlement are not observed, the United States will send her armies and her navies to see that they are observed."

The President was also quoted as having stated:

"... we must not close our eyes to the fact that in the last analysis the military and naval strength of the great powers will be the final guarantee of the peace of the world."

OTHER QUOTATIONS.

Other language attributed to the President was as follows:

"We are trying to make a peaceful settlement, that is to say, to eliminate those elements of disturbance, so far as possible, which may interfere with the peace of the world, and we are trying to make an equitable distribution of territories according to the race, the ethnographical character of the people inhabiting those territories.

"And back of that lies this fundamentally important fact, that when the decisions are made, the allied and associated powers guarantee to maintain them. It is perfectly evident, upon a moment's reflection, that the chief burden of their maintenance will fall upon the greater powers. The chief burden of the war fell upon the greater powers, and if it had not been for their action, by military action, we would not be here to settle these questions. * * *

The stenographic report quoted was contained in a letter addressed by the author, P. A. Carlson of No. 1101 Ashland Block, Chicago, to Charles M. Swem, now stenographer in the President's office, who attached to a preliminary statement issued by Joseph P. Tumulty, the President's secretary, a copy of his statement, Mr. Tumulty said:

TUMULTY'S COMMENT.

"With reference to the telegram of Senator Spencer to the President, dated October 5, 1920, in which it is alleged that at the eighth plenary session of the peace conference, the President said to Premier Bratiano of Rumania, 'You must not forget that it is force which is the final guarantee of peace. If the world is again troubled, the United States will send to this side of the ocean its army and its fleet of the line.' Hours was in receipt of Carlson's later and 'This letter speaks for itself.'

Beyond pointing out that Carlson was the "official shorthand reporter, who reported the secret sessions" of the eighth plenary session and wrote up the statements President Wilson made, Mr. Tumulty offered no further comment, nor was any statement from the President himself forthcoming.

It was stated in White House circles that making public Carlson's letter with his stenographic report of the President's utterances had the sanction and approval of the President, but it was also understood the President read the Carlson letter before it was given out at the White House.

ANSWERS TWO SENATORS.

In administration circles the action of the White House was construed as a direct reply to the message Senator Spencer sent the President on October 5 and the statement made by Senator Reed, Democrat, of Missouri, on Monday, denying the production of the stenographic report of what the President did say at the session of the peace conference at which Senator Reed quoted the President in the Senate on February 2, 1920, as saying: "You must not forget that it is force that is the final guaranty of the public peace. If the world is again troubled the United States will send to this side of the ocean their army and their fleet."

Supplementary to the Carlson letter the White House also gave out the following, in which it was stated, a "deadly parallel" between Carlson's report of the President's utterances and the version of them read into the Congressional Record of December 4, 1919, by senator Hiram Johnson, Republican, of California.

"There was a white divergence between the Carlson report and the Johnson version, it was pointed out by administration officials while they professed to seen in the absence from the Carlson report of the language attributed to the President by Senators Reed and Spencer a complete vindication of the President's position. They declared Mr. Tumulty's statement issued by the White House follows:

"With reference to the telegram of Senator Spencer to the President, dated October 5, 1920, in which it is alleged that at the eighth plenary session of the peace conference the President said to Premier Bratiano of Rumania, 'You must not forget that it is force which is the final guarantee of peace. If the world is again troubled the United States will send to this side of the ocean its army and its fleet,' the White House is in receipt of a letter, addressed to Mr. Charles L. Swem, stenographer to the President, from Mr. P. A. Carlson, No. 1101 Ashland Block, Chicago, the official shorthand reporter who reported the secret proceedings of the eighth plenary session and wrote up the statements that President Wilson made. This letter speaks for itself.

CARLSON'S LETTER.

"P. A. Carlson, shorthand reporter, 1191 Ashland Block, Chicago, Ill. Oct. 4, 1920.

"Mr. Charles L. Swem, Stenographer to the President, Washington, D. C.

"Dear Mr. Swem:

"I noticed in the Chicago papers of today, Wednesday, Oct. 6, 1920 (The Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Herald-Examiner), Washington and St. Louis dispatches in regard to Senator Spencer's statement that President Wilson had promised American military aid to Rumania and Serbia in the event of the invasion of those countries,' and the President's letter in regard thereto.

"In a St. Louis dispatch dated October 5 Senator Spencer is quoted as follows:

"'The statement of yours to which I have often referred in my addresses was the statement in the stenographic notes of the eighth plenary session of the peace conference, in which you are reported to have said to Premier Bratiano of Rumania as follows:

"'You must not forget that it is force that is the final guaranty of the public peace.'

Millions of Smiles

Now show beautiful teeth—this is why

Look at people's teeth when they smile. Many teeth are dingy and discolored. All one's attractions are marred by them.

Other teeth now glisten. For millions of people now brush teeth in a new way. Twice a day they fight the film which dulls them.

Your teeth are coated more or less if you brush them in old ways. See the difference when you brush them in the new way for a while. Ask for this ten-day test.

You must combat film

Brushing does not clean teeth if it leaves the film. It removes some debris, but it does not end the teeth's great enemy.

Millions find that well-brushed teeth still discolor and decay. Tooth troubles have been constantly increasing. Now modern dental science finds the reason in a film.

New film is viscous. You can feel it with your tongue. It clings to teeth, gets between the teeth and stays. Then, between your dental cleanings, it may do a ceaseless damage.

The ordinary tooth paste does not end film. A soapy tooth paste makes it more viscous. So brushing teeth in old ways has left much film intact. Its daily removal has in late years been a major dental problem.

How film ruins teeth

It is this film-coat that discolors, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acids. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. Thus most tooth troubles are now traced to film, and very few escape them.

Dental science, after painstaking research, has found new ways to combat film. Able authorities have proved them by clinical and laboratory tests. Their efficiency is now beyond all question. These methods have with millions revolutionized teeth cleaning.

These new factors are combined in a dentifrice called Pepsodent—an ideal tooth paste which complies with all the new requirements. Leading dentists everywhere advise it. To prove it quickly to all careful people, a ten-day tube is being sent to everyone who asks.

Five quick effects

Pepsodent brings five desired effects with every application. Some are at once apparent, and all soon show their benefits to teeth.

One ingredient is pepsin. Another multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva to digest starch deposits that cling. Another instant result is multiplied alkalinity of the saliva to neutralize mouth acids.

Two factors directly attack the film. One of them keeps teeth so highly polished that film cannot easily adhere.

Thus with every application Pepsodent combats the teeth's great enemies in new and efficient ways. Both in Europe and America it is fast bringing a new era in teeth cleaning.

The way to know it is to try it. The first application reveals some new effects. A few-day test is most convincing. See these effects, read the reasons for them, and judge this new method for yourself.

If it brings you whiter, safer, cleaner teeth, tell others about it. There are few things more important.

Watch the change in a week

Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coat disappears.

Film makes teeth dim and dingy

You may not realize it, but remove the film and see how teeth look then.

Compare your teeth now with the teeth you see after this ten-day test. It will be a revelation.

Every woman owes this to herself.

Few children escape

Children's teeth seem most susceptible to film-caused attacks. Very few young folks escape them. Dentists advise the use of Pepsodent from the day the first tooth appears.

Old methods have proved inadequate. See what the new way does. Right tooth protection in early years means much in years to come.

THREAT TO QUIT BOSTON

matter and if necessary to form immediate plans for making Dorchester a separate municipality. President Thomas Leahy of the Dorchester Civic Improvement Association will preside.

Special meetings have also been called of the Dorchester Board of Trade, composed of the leading business men of that section, the Uphams Corner Improvement Association and the Harvard Improvement Association.

Plans are also being rushed for a great mass meeting of citizens in the Dorchester High School. The delegates of citizens announce they will invite Mayor Peters and his assessors to this meeting and ask them to explain the increase in tax valuations in Dorchester.

TEN PER CENT ASSESS.

The district has not been so stirred in years, and it is not alone the property owners who are wrathy. Tenants are also up in arms at the greatly increased tax valuations a forecast of another boost in rentals.

Things are waxing warm in Dorchester, the home of the first town hall and first form of government, of the first free school in America, and the City Fathers are not going to be let down easy and without a fight. Things have started not alone among the property owners but among the tenants, who, in turn, will have to share the responsibility of the boosts.

Dorchester boasts of one-fifth of the population of Boston, and it has been assessed 36 per cent. of the total taxation of the city. The figures from the official tax sheet show the entire city increased assessment is about $44,000,000 and Dorchester's share is $13,250,000. Increase valuation on real estate and about $2,000,000 increase on personal property. Dorchester pays practically one-third the increase.

$1,000 BOOSTS.

"The Harvard Improvement Association has had a committee on the matter working for some time, but the tax bills sent out looks as if little attention was paid to their pleas. On many of the streets of that section the valuation was raised from $900 to $1,000. On Radcliff street, property owner is assessed for $500 more, while another is assessed for $1,100 more.

It is claimed that the raise in valuation is not due to the assessors who take care of the various wards for the assessing department, but that most of the values are put on in town at the City Hall Annex. Who and what is responsible for the conditions and why the district should be hit so hard and the large intown establishments get away with so little are questions being asked on every hand.

Another question that is being asked those in charge of affairs at City Hall is, "Why, when they had a competent assessor in Dorchester who know the district and conditions, should he be dropped on account of his affiliations with the leading trade and improvement associations?"

The rent payer is also interested greatly, as there are no housing accommodations in the district, and those that have a little flat and are paying twice as much rental as it is worth, will be assessed two or more dollars a month more in their rents. Many, especially those lucky enough to have their coal in, will have to bear the burden.

RAMEY FACES NEW CHARGE

Lynn Girl Declares Wakefield Youth Tried to Attack Her

that she meant she had either been struck by an auto or attacked by a man who met her on the lonely Montrose station road while driving a machine.

The first theory was demolished by the nature of her wounds, physicians said. Distinct marks of the nails of a man's hand were found on her head.

Regarding the second theory, that her assailant arrived and fled in an automobile and could not have been Ramey, Wakefield police said they had accounted for the occupants of all cars passing along the road where the attack was made last Wednesday morning.

One such car, which at first was an object of suspicion, turned out to be a machine occupied by blameless officials of the Entomology Bureau at Danvers.

Miss Merrill is twenty-two years old, pretty, and lives at No. 26 Graves place, Lynn.

NEAR WANAMAKER ATTACK.

The attempt to attack her was made in a Summer camp on the Wakefield-Lynnfield line. The spot is a short distance from the place where Miss Wanamaker was waylaid last Wednesday.

The Lynn girl identified her assailant at Ramey from pictures. She said she had no doubt of it.

Her testimony was considered important as bearing on Ramey's character, and his habit of annoying girls in the section of Wakefield where Miss Wanamaker was attacked.

Mrs. Allen Merrill, the girl's mother, spoke for her daughter. She said: "My daughter told me the day after Ramey's arrest, when she saw his pictures in the papers, that it was he who tried to attack her at our Summer camp. She has since made sure of this fact.

"On the day in question, she left the house. A moment later I heard her scream. She said something about a man.

"I called to Mrs. Augustus Wormstead, on whose farm our camp was located. She came out with her son's rifle. It was not loaded. Mrs. William Kenney, a neighbor, responded to my cries with a club in her hand. A young fellow in khaki ran away as we approached. I did not get a good look at him, Margaret did.

SLAPPED HIS FACE.

"Margaret told me the fellow approached her threateningly, with his fingers on his lips, commanding her to silence. When she screamed he continued to come on. She slapped his face. He disregarded it, and would have unquestionably attacked her, but for Mrs. Wormstead's rifle.

"She told us the boy acted as if he was half-witted. She described him as wearing a khaki suit, and of medium height, long nose, thin face, and blue eyes. He was tall and slender. She has no doubt it was Ramey."

Mrs. Merrill said it was the same morning that a 150-pound stone was mysteriously rolled down on the railroad track not far away, nearly derailing the 8.10 passenger train.

The locality is not only close to the place where Miss Wanamaker was attacked, but even nearer the Montrose greenhouses where Ramey worked.

Wakefield authorities were waiting hopefully today for Miss Wanamaker's complete return to consciousness and the statement which it was expected would clear up the mystery.

All Wakefield was rejoicing in her safe and sure recovery. This was particularly true of her friends in the Wakefield Methodist Episcopal church, who were praying for her.

FATHER CONDEMNS LAXITY.

Charles O. Wanamaker, father of Mildred, said today that the authorities had committed a grave error, in his opinion, when they failed to commit Frank Ramey to a correctional institution a year ago.

"If they had my daughter would not now be between life and death at Melrose Hospital," added Wanamaker. "I contend that they had plenty of warning. I am positive in my mind that Ramey did this to Mildred, and, like her mother, feel sure that when she recovers her faculties, she will name Ramey.

"We are not influenced in the slightest by all the talk about another so-called 'wild man' in the woods. We feel convinced that the police locked up the right man. The boy is not right mentally. I so regarded him for some time, but his should be put where he can not be a menace.

CALLS BOY MENACE.

"Mildred complained that she used to see him skulking behind trees. Frank Ramey is a type of boy who must be watched. He was a real menace to my daughter and she met the very experience that she had been dreading for months. I had twice called upon the legal authorities for the protection that she and we were entitled to by law.

WOMAN IS NEVER MAN'S COMPETITOR, PRIEST TELLS ALUMNAE

AMERICAN HOME NOW VANISHING

It Is Becoming Only a Place to Sleep, Says Rev. Augustine J. Hickey

Woman is never man's competitor, Rev. Father Augustine F. Hickey, supervisor of Catholic schools in the Boston diocese, told the women attending the convention of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae at today's session in the Hotel Brunswick.

There is a place in the business world for women, the priest said, but he told them that if they were placed there by circumstances to bring to it refinement, religion and culture.

"The home, he declared, was fast disappearing from American life. It has become merely a place to sleep, he said. With its loss, he asserted, the country was losing its chief instrument of education, schools being of secondary importance.

CHILD AND THE HOME.

"A child spends only one one-thousandth of its waking hours in school during the course of a year," said Father Hickey. "The rest is spent at home. It is there that a child's likes, dislikes and prejudices may be discussed, wrong inclinations suppressed and the right developed.

"A spoiled, selfish child is the fault of the home, not the school. That is why the indissolubility of marriage is insisted upon by the church. The parents will have to cling together for the right to develop the child. The church demands that the right of a home be preserved for sake of the child.

"It is the parents' right to select the school to which the child is to be educated, but it is not right to attach too much importance to the work of the school in a child's development. The child does not belong to the school. The school is simply an agent working for the parents and operating under their authority.

RUSH FROM HOME.

"The seat of education is at the home, but its influence is threatened under the present economic system. The home is losing its character and influence. Recreation, even, is no longer taken at the family fireside, but mother, father and children rush hither and thither and home seems merely a place to sleep.

"The home is fast disappearing in American life. I appeal to you as Catholic women that you give the matter your careful consideration and that every woman here fulfill to the all her highest duty in the home, remembering that woman is never man's competitor. She has her place in the world and in the name of God, I appeal to you Catholic women, whether teachers or sisters, to strive to bring refinement, religion and culture out into the world with you and at the same time neglect not the interests of the home."

Deputies have been instructed to investigate to see how rigidly the law is being enforced and to instruct dealers in optical goods regarding the application of the tax.

BANDITS ROB 10 MEN OF $4000

Four Masked Gunmen Hold Up New Hampshire Men at Guns' Point

Auburn, N. H., Oct. 11.—Four masked robbers held up and robbed ten Manchester and Concord business men early today, as they were leaving a cottage on the outskirts of Auburn.

Relieving their victims of $4,000 in cash and about $1,000 worth of jewelry, the bandits made their escape in an automobile bearing a Massachusetts number.

The holdup, carried out with all the atmosphere of a thrilling movie, was one of the most sensational ever brought to the attention of the local police. The robbery was engineered by a ring leader who directed the victims to line up while he gathered up the money and valuables under the protection of wicked-looking weapons held by his confederates.

The business men were warned that an attempt to break away or give an alarm would be met with death. When the money and jewelry had been collected the quartet backed toward their autos, jumped in, and with a roar the high powered car sped away.

A squad of Manchester police were hurried to the scene of the robbery, but could find no trace of the gunmen.

The men robbed are Edward McPherson, Philip Connolly, Saros Cesan, Louis Wildman, Arthur Beaulieu and Samuel Roth of Manchester and Andrew Lekos, Daniel Harrington, Samuel Dufrain and Timothy Faime of Concord.

Fashion Robs Rooster of His Silvery Tail

New York, Oct. 11.—By some unknown hook or crook, the wily chanticleer has managed to acquire domination of Fifth avenue. At the present moment he is sitting upon the tip-top peak of fashion. Modistes and designers cluteh wildly for his tail feathers and think up new ways to use them on women's garments.

Not for a long, long time has there been anything seen here to compare with the hats, scarfs, wraps and gowns made from or with the green-black plumage which ordinarily ornaments the rooster.

Running neck and neck with the craze for pearl-gray are bands of Persian lamb in the color which today were seen for the first time upon hats and dresses.

So for the first time today appeared the enormous sashes undoubtedly to be carried beyond the point of beauty.

And both of these last named concepts are in some cases a part of the adjustable suit-and-dress garments with their tall collars and bright embroideries, which will be offered to Autumn shoppers from now on.

But not one of these whims of style, with their practicable lure, elicits one fraction of the interest in flighty coque feathers. These positively are the last word and, if popularity holds, there is little doubt that women of this city soon will resemble a section of the Italian military.

An attractive design was a coque wreath upon a wide-brimmed red velvet hat. The feather-ends were dipped in silver and used somewhat sparsely. Numerous small hats have the coque wreath circling the crown and hanging from the left side quite to the shoulder.

Still more exotic is the effect of coque used as dress-trimming. Quite a barn-yard tone was established by an evening gown of green-gray charmeuse, simply fashioned, with the feathers sticking out straight from either side the skirt. At the waist-line they were bunched to stand up from a feather medallion of gold and red and looked exactly as if this wearer of the gown was carrying a rooster under each arm.

DEMAND POSTAL WAGE BOARD

Dissatisfaction at Recent Award Also Expressed at Postoffice Clerks' Meeting

Better pay for postal employes and the establishment of a permanent postal wage commission were demanded in resolutions adopted at the monthly meeting of Local 100, National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, in Naomi Hall, Washington street.

The resolutions were presented and carried after a speech pointing out the need of aggressive action by John A. Kelley, president of the local.

President Kelley said the present Congressional commission was not competent to have charge of such an important and constantly changing problem as postal clerks' wages.

In this connection, he pointed out that the recent wage award by the Congressional commission ignored the recommendations made by the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Labor.

AWARD INADEQUATE.

He said the award was wholly inadequate, and illustrated the folly of leaving the matter up to a committee whose members served on half a dozen other committees, and did not have time to grasp the question. He said:

"The Postoffice Department has increased since 1789 from seventy-five postoffices, $7,510 revenue and ninety-one employes to 54,000 postoffices, over $450,000,000 revenue and over 400,000 employes. Dealing as it is in small sales, one and two-cent postage, etc., it is the largest business in the world.

"It is too extensive, too important to the country to be haphazardly entrusted to a congressional committee, who perhaps are members of other committees, and are concerned with public questions, and cannot give to the Postoffice Department the close attention it requires.

"CONGRESS NEGLECTFUL."

"Under the present system the welfare of 400,000 employes is dependent upon a too often neglectful and forgetful Congress. A system wherein readjustment of salary and working conditions has not been radically changed in thirteen years is without doubt faulty and should be changed.

"It was in 1907 that Congress classified the salaries and working conditions of postal employes and with few changes that classification held good in 1920, notwithstanding the fact that during the period from 1907 to 1920 not only the period from 1912 the cost of living had rapidly increased, and the country was passing through abnormal living conditions and wartime conditions.

"Times are changing, conditions change rapidly and if thirteen years are required for reclassification, then surely someone suffers for the delay."

COX SAYS TAFT AIDED LEAGUE

Charges Other G. O. P. Leaders Also Gave Suggestions to Wilson in Framing Pact

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 11.—Governor James M. Cox, Democratic nominee for President, issued a statement here in which he said that William Howard Taft, former Republican President; Charles E. Hughes, former candidate for President on the Republican ticket, and Elihu Root, twice a Cabinet member during Republican administrations, gave League suggestions to President Wilson which the President had incorporated into the covenant.

The Governor said Taft made four amendments and all were adopted. Hughes offered seven amendments and five were adopted. He also asserted that members of the foreign relations committee offered suggestions for the league and that many of them were incorporated in the covenant.

In addition Governor Cox made public cable correspondence between Taft and President Wilson in which Taft offered amendments to the league covenant which the President welcomed and used.

Cox charges that the present fight on the league is a partisan conspiracy that "is holding up the civilization of the world and starving at the heart-strings of humanity," that "peace should not come as the result of an election in which the President had a directing hand."

Hub Has U. S. Army's Handsomest Officer

Here is Major Adna G. Wilde of the Medical Corps, the "beauty of the service," and—let it be known—the army is famous for its good looks, minus or plus insignia

Here are some interesting observations of Major Adna G. Wilde who has arrived in Boston from West Point to become the attending surgeon of the First Army Corps Area, U. S. A.

They also say—proudly if not boastfully—that he is the "typical" army officer.

Dr. Wilde is a blonde.

He wears eye-glasses, is six feet one inch tall and weighs 182 pounds. He has been three years assistant to Major Wilde is a graduate of the University of Virginia. He has all the satoir faire of the Virginia gentleman.

The new surgeon's arrival is a continuance of the "Southern invasion" of Yankeeland. He is the fifth or seventh Southron to be assigned to the First Army Corps Area under General Stanley, another Virginian.

Brother officers of the new attending surgeon, in speaking to an interested young reporter with all this information about one of the army's finest men, could not resist the fair temptation to add that the major is married and has two children.

MIDDLE WEST IS ANTI-LEAGUE

Harding, on Last Leg of 2,500-Mile Trip, Impressed by Republican Outpourings

St. Louis, Oct. 11—En route to Marion on the last stage of his 2,500-mile trip through eight States, Senator Warren G. Harding arrived here at 7.30 last night from Oklahoma City.

The one outstanding feature of the trip was the universal acclaim given the candidate's unmistakable and complete opposition to the League of Nations by the big audiences which addressed on the trip, beginning with the speech in Des Moines, Ia., in which the Republican standard bearer finally "nailed his flag to the mast" on the covenant brought home by President Wilson.

Senator Harding has not missed a single opportunity to press his attack home and put his party squarely on record with regard to the great issue of the campaign. This attitude met with enthusiastic and instant response everywhere on the trip.

At least one disputed question of the campaign was finally settled when The Middle West is opposed to the league. This was clearly indicated by the attitude of the throngs addressed by the nominee.

Political observers believe that Senator Harding's statement that "you cannot give one right to a white man and deny that same right to a black man," will lose votes for the nominee in some of the doubtful border States where the question of race segregation is an important one.

The almost unprecedented reception given the candidate in the eight States included in the trip has created such a distinct impression upon Senator Harding and the managers that no one in the party can see, talk, or think anything but a Republican landslide in November.

LEARNS THE BIG SECRETS.

With all these details mastered, he was let into the great secret of all—the secret by which the silk threads pass into the pulp and become a part of the government paper money.

For a year or more "Win" Crane was just one of 50 or more laborers, in the mill he was taken into the office. There he came under the direct tutelage of his father.

Early in December 1, 1904, Senator Crane had such confidence in his son that he left him in charge while he and in the Senate he turned over to him all his interest in the government mill, so that time the young man had acquired an intimate knowledge of the business. The exact duties of the Cranes—the Pioneer, the Old Hero, and the E. and W. M. Crane.

Like his father, "Win" Crane always has taken a great interest in the Dalton Congregational church. For two years he was superintendent of the Sunday School and he is now clerk of the parish committee.

The Dalton selectmen have appointed Winthrop M. Crane to succeed his father as a cemetery trustee and the son has moved into his father's private room in the Crane & Co. office building.

Winthrop M. Crane's family life is most happy. He was married on February 7, 1905, to Miss Ethel G. Eaton, daughter of Arthur W. Eaton, a paper manufacturer of Pittsfield, head of the Eaton, Crane & Pike Company. They have three children, Barbara, Winthrop M. Crane, 2d, and Arthur Eaton Crane.

Crane's Son Win' Takes Father's Job

Pittsfield, Oct. 11.—Winthrop Murray Crane, Jr., now in his thirty-ninth year, has become by the death of his father the head of the Crane family and the directing genius of the vast paper manufacturing business at Dalton.

By the will of his father he has become one of the wealthiest young men in New England. To his business associates in Dalton, to the workers in the mills, to his friends—and they are legion—he is known as "Win" Crane with all the characteristics of his father.

The story is told of a poorly-clad "knight of the road" who called at the office of Crane & Co. on a cold Winter's day and asked for an overcoat. Senator Crane had stepped out for a few minutes and when he was there, and after hearing the weary tale of woe took off the coat from his father's $200 brand new overcoat, gave it to the tramp and told him to go his way. That night Senator Crane was telling his son how he had had an overcoat stolen from the office in the afternoon, and when explanations were given the father said:

THE FIFTH GENERATION.

Winthrop M. Crane is of the fifth generation of the family that has made paper in Dalton, and like his predecessors in the line he was schooled in the business. He prepared for college at the Dalton High School and Andover Academy, and graduated from Yale with high honors in 1904. His fellow classmates say that he was not a phenomenal student, a "wizard," but he was studious and applied himself to his books when necessary and at all times he had a great fund of practical common sense.

True to the traditions of the Crane family, on July 18, 1904, he put on his overalls and started in to work in the sacroom of the government note paper mill at $15 a week, with a 10-hour day. It was his job to throw the linen rags into a big cylinder, where the dust was beaten out. Then he went into the next department, where the rags are bleached in huge vats of chloride of lime, and finally are washed for the last time in clear running spring water. He then went into the beating room, where the rags having been washed away have nothing but the fibre left, which is beaten into a mass of pure white pulp.

LEARNS THE BIG SECRETS.

With all these details mastered, he was let into the great secret of all—the secret by which the silk threads pass into the pulp and become a part of the government paper money.

For a year or more "Win" Crane was just one of 50 or more laborers, in the mill. He was taken into the office. There he came under the direct tutelage of his father.

Like his father, "Win" Crane always has taken a great interest in the Dalton Congregational church. For two years he was superintendent of the Sunday School and he is now clerk of the parish committee.

The Dalton selectmen have appointed Winthrop M. Crane to succeed his father as a cemetery trustee and the son has moved into his father's private room in the Crane & Co. office building.

Winthrop M. Crane's family life is most happy. He was married on February 7, 1905, to Miss Ethel G. Eaton, daughter of Arthur W. Eaton, a paper manufacturer of Pittsfield, head of the Eaton, Crane & Pike Company. They have three children, Barbara, Winthrop M. Crane, 2d, and Arthur Eaton Crane.

ALCOHOL IN TRANSIT REPLACED BY WATER

Somewhere between this city and Marblehead ten gallons of water were substituted for this amount of alcohol consigned by the Eastern Drug Company to William G. Gregory, a Marblehead druggist. The spout of the tin container, which had been sealed with plaster of paris, had been tampered with. The police of Boston, Lynn, Salem and Marblehead, together with Federal agents, are searching for the thief.

BROWN'S FATE IN WIFE'S STORY

Defence Will Rely on Her Recital of Relations With the Slain Man

Dedham, N. H., Oct. 11.—Carroll County courthouse was literally swamped today by crowds of men and women anxious to hear Mrs. George Brown, star witness for the defense in the accused of murder, tell of her acquaintance with the victim of the murder.

From Tamworth, sandwich and many surrounding towns, and from isolated farmhouses, the curious came, in automobiles, on foot, in farm wagons and vehicles of every description, all eager to hear the story of a woman's soul from her own lips.

They lined the sidewalks around the courthouse for hours before the doors opened. Although little courtroom was large in which Presiding Justice Allen will try the murder case, not enough to hold half of the throng, the curiosity seekers being allowed all day long to leave.

MRS. BROWN'S STORY.

The fact that the defense will rely on Mrs. Brown's story, and that she is expected to go into the most intimate details of her relations with Clifford Brown and her husband's victim, has made the trip from all parts of this State and has attracted many women.

It is known that Brown shot Donovan after finding his wife with the latter in a compromising position, and it is upon that fact he frees Brown.

Aside from the interest in the differential between the two men, and the shading their homicidal acts at the latter part of the night, the fact that Associate Chief Justice John Kivel of Berlin who has just returned from two years spent in the army, and Judge Allen, who also served on the same staff and was in charge of the Base Hospital at Camp Devens, will be called upon to rule on a number of questions of law as a unprecedented case of its kind.

During the forenoon Brown's lawyers, Attorney Edward L. Arbutt of Wolfeboro and William H. Sawyer of Concord, have been at hand in session with Judge Allen. Solicitor William J. Hinkley and Attorney-General Oscar L. Young of Laconia have been at hand to confer with Judge and State witnesses at the hotel.

ON VERGE OF BREAKDOWN.

Brown was brought over from jail at 9 o'clock this morning and he appeared much worried since being in custody. He paced the floor and smoked cigars of a strong odor. He showed signs of a breakdown.

There promises to be a hard battle in the case, both sides are fighting it, it is thought that additional witnesses will be summoned to complete the jury. Several talesmen have been excused after they have expressed their opinions.

Brown's wife, Mrs. Blanche Brown, is the principal witness on the defense and the confession made by Brown on the night of the murder will be read and Solicitor Britton at Mr. Wallace's request. Brown has several witnesses from Brown's home town to testify to the standing of the men and the settlement of the case. It is expected that Britton will make the opening for the State and Rogers for the defense. Brown's wife take the stand in his own defense.

GIRLS LOCKED IN DRUG STORE CELLAR ALL NIGHT

Forced to spend Saturday night in the cellar of a Scollay square drug store, into which they were locked by mistake, two girl employes of the store, Louise Morris and Anna Weker, passed a night of terror until early Sunday morning, when they managed to sound the burglar alarm bringing a special officer to their assistance and they were released.

Discolored, Wrinkled Skin Easily Removed

Sun-s brown or yellow over-red or blotchy complexions are decidedly not the fashion, it is difficult to understand why so many continue to wear them. Surely every woman has heard of mercolized wax. This will positively banish every unsightly tint. The wax really takes off a bad complexion. It gradually, but harmlessly, absorbs the thin layer of surface skin, with each defects as liver spots, pimples, freckles, blackheads. Due as gradually the discolored skin is removed by the clear white, youthful skin underneath. Mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, is applied like cold cream, and the increased nutrimings with warm water. One ounce will produce the brightest girlish complexion in less than a fortnight.

It is hard to understand also why folks will be bothered with wrinkles, since the 2-ounce mercolized formula has become public property. One ounce of powdered saxolite dissolved in a half-pint witch hazel, makes a wash lotion that will smile effect like, even the deepest.—Advertisement.

You do the work in a jiffy, in your own home, without assistance. It does away with numerous and expensive visits to the electrolysis expert. Cuddy of the committee on athletics says he will have a first-class series of events, with some novelties, such as the participation of members of the Olympic team, and the interesting, but seldom seen feat, throwing the javelin. Other events are: 100-yard dash, 440-yard run, 880-yard run, mile run, five-mile run, relay race, running high jump and running broad jump.

This will be the signal for the audience to stand and sing the anthem. During the evening motion pictures will illustrate industrial and social life of the countries south of the Panama Canal, as well as current events in the United States.

EXPECT 25,000 PEOPLE.

Mass meeting of families and patriotic songs will be directed by Thomas E. Clifford of the Service Unit organization, with the words of the songs thrown on a big twenty-foot screen which will be placed at the top of the hill. Provision has been made for an audience of 25,000 people.

Mayor Peters will deliver an address during the evening and will personally welcome representatives of the countries of South and Central America who have accepted his invitation to be present. An invitation has also been extended to students at local institutions to be present.

A concert of half an hour by L'Africain's Band will open the evening program at 7:45 o'clock.

The Columbus Day committee of 1920 consists of: Chairman, John B. Archibald; secretary, E. B. Mero; Frank C. Brown, William H. Cuddy, E. L. Curran, Frank Leveroni and James H. Phelan.

Big Navy Yard Fete Tomorrow

"Going four bells and a jingle," in navy lingo, is what passengers will experience on the United States destroyer Cowell tomorrow at the Navy Yard, when visitors will be taken for a two-hour speed trip out of the harbor on the very last word in construction of this type of craft.

The Cowell will make two trips, at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m., leaving Pier No. 3, with 100 passengers each trip. Thirty-five knots an hour, or about forty land miles, is the Cowell's record and it is expected that side seas are being made that this figure will be exceeded.

The proceeds from this and other entertainment offered to visitors on "Navy Day," in celebration of Columbus Day, will go toward the Navy Relief Society to aid dependents of disabled seamen.

The program is wide and varied, including everything from sea trips to foundry work. All the shops of the yard will be open to inspection and guests will be shown the machine, electrical, boiler, plumber, copper and other shops in operation; the famous rope walk, more than a hundred years old, where rope was formerly made by hand, and will visit the various battleships and other navy craft now attached to the local yard.

IS MARRIAGE A SUCCESS?

Pets, Pipe and Violin Make Him Happy

Marriage Editor: I am a single man and I am happy. I am sixty years old and living in a three-room tenement; cook my own meals, wash my own clothes, sew buttons on all my clothes and have plenty of money. If I were married I should not enjoy all these comforts. I have my cat and my dog, my violin and my pipe, and a warm house for the Winter. When there are old maids there ought to be "old batches."

Tit for tat.

Salem Street. G. F.

"CROWNED WITH A BRICK."

To the Marriage Editor: I should like very much to meet the young lady who signed herself "Anti-Turk," and clap her on the back, as she has the right idea. My only regret is that that so-called Turkish "gentleman" is not in Turkey where he belongs instead of in a civilized country like America.

Of course, if his timid little wives will stand for that form of punishment they deserve all they get, but if he were my husband I fear he would be crowned with a brick never to breathe again. I myself am a young married woman and have the very best reasons that America can produce. Life is just as unmakes it. My idea is that marriage is a success absolutely. We believe in the fifty-fifty plan and we are both very happy. We have been married a couple of years, but it seems like a couple of months. Sincerely,

E. G.

Boston.

"MISS" AFTER MARRIAGE?

To Marriage Editor: In an issue of your paper there was a letter from a husband suffering from what he considered a "too modern" wife. Perhaps I may help him by stating some facts which I got from a member of the legal profession of Massachusetts.

When a woman marries, the civil law refers to her as "Miss." The prefix "Mrs." whether she retains her own name or the man's. This is a matter of choice for her. Further, the same law decrees that if there are children, they shall take the father's name. He speaks of her preference to support herself, etc. All these things should have been talked over and decided on before any marriage. Women are human beings and have as much right to live their own lives as the men.

The trouble with marriage is that there has been so little common sense education on the subject. Both young men and women need it. It is the children who are the coming generation, and the ideas they are taught will be handed down. If the quality of its children in health and true thinking on vital matters does not obtain, the country retrogrades.

Medford.

"HORSE SENSE" NEEDED.

Marriage Editor: In regard to Mr. George Keiser's piece as to love not being necessary, I would like to advise him to be sure that the girl he marries can get a little for him before he gets joined for life; for if she doesn't, he'll find he has a hard love to pull. There is no reason why marriage should not be a success if the couple use just a little horse sense.

GEORGE B.

Plymouth.

A SECOND NAT GOODWIN.

Marriage Editor: Is marriage a success? Yes, indeed, it certainly is, so far as domestic infelicity is concerned. Nat Goodwin (peace to his ashes) was just one lap ahead of the writer. He were he alive today, would be able to give you some reliable information in regard to the question.

Claremont, N. H. M. S.

WHAT ONE WIFE ENDURES.

Marriage Editor: Is marriage a success? That covers a lot of ground, doesn't it? It would say it depended entirely on the individual contracting it. My condition is based on my own experience and that of a number of my friends.

I am thirty-five, having good health, an attractive home, a lovely child, sufficient money for my needs and yet I say in all honesty I would gladly forfeit my life—If it would not affect my boy—to get away from the humiliation, the loneliness and restlessness of my marriage. I am not personally ambitious for material things, but I, like all wives, require love, faith and tenderness to be happy. I want a real home, a real man to work for and build with. I need companionship and a little diversion to offset the care and responsibility of a family and a home. I want something in marriage that will be a pleasant memory, when I shall have grown old, for something that produces the dear little old lady whom young people adore to be with.

My husband impresses me as not know him as an honest man, a devoted husband, and yet he has deceived me repeatedly, neglected me and been unfaithful while we were apparently happy and satisfied. Those things that hurt me so keenly he calls mistakes, foolishness, etc., and forgets them. Now I am not able to divorce if he is dissatisfied with me, but he does not want that. He requires that I shall remain his wife, bring up his boy, care for his home, entertain his friends, show him affection even though I know him to be untrue, overlook his indiscretions, surround him with respectability and—be happy. Some job.

I have a sneaking fancy that a great many men share these views and wonder why marriage is not a success for them. Now, they couldn't conduct a business partnership on this basis and achieve success—how can they hope to with marriage, the biggest business in life?

I am sure my husband would be judged a good man—as men go (your pardon, gentlemen readers); and yet so long as he supports me it does not concern him that I am lonely and disillusioned and heart-hungry. I myself am far from perfect, and confess to many faults and weaknesses (the last word, for instance); yet I know I am a far more worthy girl than when he married me. The fact that I remain with him and do as he wishes while I resent his disloyalty should prove, at least, that I am tolerant. Also, I am still young enough and not too awfully unattractive to stand a chance of attaining happiness if I were free.

And so, while I am keen for marriage and all it stands for, eager to do my part, I must go on searching beyond for my Bluebird.

If a man takes everything, giving nothing in return, he cannot hope for happiness, because the things that a wife has to offer—her love, loyalty and companionship—are not the things he wants. I am not much of a parlor entertainer; that is, I am not talented; but I can sew well, cook well, and best of all, enjoy doing them, so there is no kick in that quarter.

I do want to extend congratulations to the wife of the "Happy Days" man. She is very fortunate. That is what we want, to produce successful marriages—his wonderful understanding, his sentiment and his fine tolerance of our faults, because (whisper it softly) we haven't a monopoly of them. LONELY DAYS.

Boston.

DOWN ON SUFFRAGE.

Dear Marriage Editor: Marriage would be more of a success if women, instead of trying to be suffragettes and looking for votes, would stay at home as God meant them to and have children. No, they think it is a disgrace to have large families, and most of them would rather lead a dog around on a chain than to feel baby arms around them. Nothing can bind a mother and father together more than little children. I have been married fifteen years and wouldn't change my lot with any millionaire. I have seven children, which I call God's blessings, and every one was welcome. MARRIED AND HAPPY.

South Boston.

INTERNATIONAL LAWS.

Marriage Editor: The reason for getting married should go a mutual love in which passion naturally plays a part. Nobody should enter into a marriage contract without expecting to bring children into the world; without children, no marriage is sanctified. Our very love for the opposite sex was given to us for the purpose of propagation. Marriage is the one thing in all the world that should be governed by international laws.

Dorchester. "ONCE MARRIED."

MOTHER VERSUS WIFE.

Marriage Editor: In regard to the letter of Mrs. E. B. I should like to advise her concerning the unhappiness she has had. If I were she I would return to Chicago and reason things out with her husband. Then ask him which one he chooses to live with. If he chooses his mother, he isn't worth living with.

Of course it is not right for him to pay attention to other women, but don't blame him, blame his mother. Most all mothers-in-law mean trouble and I think it is safer to keep away from them as much as possible.

Let me hear again, Mrs. E. B.

WOMAN FOUGHT FOR HER LIFE

Mrs. D' Amico, Killed in Somerville, Died After Struggle with Assailant

Mrs. Teresa D'Amico, murdered in her bed on Somerville avenue, Somerville, was killed only after a terrible struggle with her assailant, Medical Examiner Charles F. McAfrey announced today.

The wound on her breast was inflicted in this struggle, he was inclined to believe, not from any desire to mutilate.

Her throat was cut so deeply that her windpipe was severed. Scratches on her face and throat and the marks of fingers on her wrists gave evidence of the desperation with which she fought for life.

Police officials were somewhat puzzled by the facts disclosed by the autopsy. It had been at first supposed the woman was murdered while she slept.

The police were unable to imagine how such a terrible struggle could have taken place in the room without the knowledge of other tenants.

Search was on for the man who occupied the furnished rooms with Mrs. D'Amico and was known as her husband.

Last seen hurrying toward Union square, Somerville, shortly after screams had been heard in the room, further trace of him has been lost.

Search was on today for Angelo D'Amico, the woman's real husband. A threatening letter signed with his name was found among her effects.

The letter was from the Pittsburgh, Pa., penitentiary, where D'Amico was supposed to be serving a sentence for murder. Inquiry disclosed that no man of that name is now in the penitentiary.

HANNAS FAIL TO MAKE PEACE

Son of Senator Decides to Sell His Valuable Property at Lenox

Lenox, Oct. 11.—All hope of a reconciliation between Dan R. Hanna and his wife apparently vanished today with his announcement that he would sell his Bonny Brier Farm property here. This property he acquired shortly before marriage, with the purpose of giving it to Mrs. Hanna.

Hanna, son of Mark Hanna, Ohio President-maker, has for two years lived apart from his wife, who was Mrs. Mollie Covington Warden.

He has said separation was the only way he could obtain peace and relief from his wife's "unconquerable jealousy." Some weeks ago the romantically inclined thought they saw a reconciliation coming.

Blooded cattle, pedigreed fowl and coatly farm machinery will go. A few of the horses Hanna will take to his new home in Croton, N. Y.

Youth of 17 Taken for Atlantic Avenue Transaction; "Jakey" and Whiskey Seized

Four men were arrested and a quantity of "Jakey," wine and whiskey seized in various parts of the North End as the result of a crusade conducted under Captain Arthur H. McConnell of the Hanover Street Station. All the arrests were made by plain clothes men.

Harry Wilfand, aged thirty, No. 43 Ebering street, Mattapan, was arrested at No. 152 Atlantic avenue where it is alleged, he was seen to sell Jamaica ginger. Seventy bottles of this mixture was seized.

Armed with a search warrant, officers raided the premises at No. 45 Salem street and arrested Joseph Capilli, aged thirty-six, on the charge of keeping and exposing intoxicating liquors. Five quarts of whiskey and one gallon of wine were seized.

Roderick Rodriguez, aged forty, was arrested at No. 37 Fleet street by the police, he had in his possession liquor. The evidence was removed to the station.

TIMELY BEAUTY HINTS

Society women wash their own hair, not because it is a fad, but because they wish to obtain the greatest possible hair beauty and be sure they are not using anything harmful. They have found that in washing the hair it is never wise to use a makeshift, but is always advisable to use a preparation made for shampooing only. Many of our friends say they get the best results from a simple home-made canthrox mixture. You can use this at a cost of about 3 cents a shampoo by getting some canthrox from your druggist and dissolving a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. This makes enough shampoo liquid to apply to all the hair instead of just the top of the head, as with most preparations. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear in the rinsing water. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its lustre and softness will also delight you.—Advertisement.

Man and Woman Die in Crash of Motorcycle and Machine in Needham

Two more names were added to the toll of the "auto death month" October and nearly a score of persons were injured in motor accidents.

Vincenzo Rossato, No. 478 Metropolitan avenue, Hyde Park, and Mrs. Santa Bartera, No. 1 Willis court, Needham, died in the Dover Hospital following an accident in Great Plain avenue, Needham. A sidecar motorcycle driven by Rossato and Bartera collided head on with an automobile driven by Frederick Shackley, No. 67 Anawan avenue, West Roxbury.

Kenneth Wright, of Bartlett street, Arlington Heights, is in grave danger-let at the Lynn Hospital with a fractured skull as the result of a head-on collision on the Saugus River bridge between two autos.

Eight others were injured: Conrad Hedine, No. 567 Harvard street, East Cambridge, cuts and bruises; Miss Fay Smith, No. 34 Tudor street, Lynn, cuts and bruises; William Trales, No. 1504 Columbus avenue, Roxbury, multiple bruises; Miss Bertha Doucette, No. 574 East Fourth street, South Boston, bruises; John J. Kane, No. 19 Forbes street, Jamaica Plain, cuts; Mr. and Mrs. James F. Connolly, No. 576 East Fourth street, South Boston.

A collision on Revere Beach Boulevard between cars operated by Dr. John J. Hurley of No. 194 Bay State road, Boston, and William S. Pride of No. 218 Lowell street, Waltham, resulted in a severe shaking up and minor injuries to the occupants.

Those in the cars were Mrs. John J. Hurley, John Graham, Mrs. Mary Goodale, Wendell Goodale, and Mrs. Sadie Dix, the last three of No. 399 Moody street, Waltham.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. North of No. 14 Wyman street, Arlington, and a woman were slightly injured when their machine struck one driven by Joseph C. Holmes of No. 246 Park avenue, Arlington Heights, head on in the Mystic Valley Boulevard.

James Butterworth of Beverly sustained a broken nose and leg and other injuries when his machine bumped into a trolley pole. John Lavy of No. 238 Columbia road, Dorchester, escaped injury, and his ten-year-old son Albert, was slightly hurt when an elevated car crashed into his machine at Stanwood street and Columbia road.

Knocked down by an auto operated by Harry C. Shoetmres of Somerville, on Washington, near the Dedham line, Mrs. Jennie M. Kenney of No. 12 Ridge street, Dedham, was taken to the City Hospital with a fractured skull.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Toppin and their daughter of Natick miraculously escaped death when their machine ran down the embankment into the Charles River, near the Watertown Arsenal Bridge. The occupants got out of the machine without getting wet, and the car was later salvaged.

GAIN IS SHOWN IN MARINE RECRUITING

Washington, Oct. 11.—Recruiting for the Marine Corps has made a remarkable gain since July, when 826 recruits were enlisted.

A substantial increase was recorded for August, when the total accepted applicants numbered 1,345, and in September the total rose to 1,656, more than doubling the figures for July.

Early returns for October show a still greater increase, and it is expected that the final figures for the current month will far exceed the September total.

Makers of Elgin Cars Will Not Cut Price

Another prominent automobile organization to come out positively against any price reduction for the present is the Elgin Motor Car Corporation, makers of the Elgin Six. This decision has just been received from headquarters by the Elgin agents for New England, the Sullivan and Sullivan Company, No. 1118 Boylston street. Present Elgin prices will be guaranteed against reduction until June 1, 1921.

One fact taken into consideration in making this re-affirming decision is that the cost of labor and materials still remains high and that while these conditions exist there cannot be any reduction of price on a fair-profit basis.

The Elgin Company announces that this statement is due to purchasers of Elgin Cars, in order to assure them that they have not been subjected to profiteering in the past, nor will be in the future.

DROWNS WIFE AND SELF

Nashua Man Holds Woman's Head Under Water Until Death Ensues

Nashua, N. H., Oct. 11.—Luring his wife to a small pond near the South Nashua Cemetery, Loren Fuller, aged fifty-five, dragged her into shallow water, held her beneath the surface until she drowned and then wading out into deeper water drowned himself.

Fuller, since an attack of influenza, has suffered frequent spells of illness and melancholia and it is believed he killed his wife and took his own life in a fit of mental depression.

The woman's body was discovered by children roaming the woods in the rear of the cemetery. They notified Major Jack B. Gardner, who employed Fuller as a farmhand and near whose estate the pond is situated. He notified the police and Mrs. Fuller's remains were taken from the water.

Investigation at the Fuller home then revealed that the couple had left the house at Fuller's suggestion "to take a walk." The police returned to the scene and boys wading into the pond discovered his body.

The condition of Mrs. Fuller's hair and clothing indicated that she had resisted her husband's efforts to drown her and footprints on the edge of the pond showed that there had been a struggle. No one in the vicinity could be found, however, who had heard cries for help.

Fuller was born in Lowell and lived in that city until 1917. He was employed in the Locks and Canal Works, Lowell, for twenty-two years. Leaving his native city he hired a small farm in Dracut.

Wed ... Where They Pledged Troth

North Woodstock, N. H., Oct. 11.—Standing at dusk on the bank of the Moosilock River, at the exact spot where they plighted their troth a year ago, Miss Daisy Wallace and Ralph Potter of Marlboro, Mass., were married by Rev. H. S. Putnam, pastor of the Marlboro Methodist Church.

Only the mothers of the principals, Mrs. O. W. Russ and Mrs. George Potter, were witnesses.

The bride is one of the prettiest girls of Marlboro. She was graduated from Marlboro High school several years ago and has been employed as a secretary at the United Shoe Machinery plant in Beverly. The groom is teller in a Boston bank.

Their romance, which began in childhood, reached its climax while the young people were summering here a year ago. At that time they gave a unique engagement party on the same spot on the river bank.

WOMAN HINTS AT DENTON CLEW

Mrs. Peete to Tell Grand Jury of Life in Home of Slain Man

Los Angeles, Oct. 11.—Mrs. Louise Peete intimates that before the grand jury takes up the Denton case next Thursday she may give information that will aid in the discovery of the murderer of Jacob C. Denton.

Declaring that it was her intention to go into minute details of her residence in the Denton home with her attorney, former Judge O. N. Hilton, before the grand jury meets next Thursday, she added:

"It is possible that in my memory there may be one fact that may aid in discovering the slayer of the man whose body was found."

This statement was made at her hotel in La Brescent after a short conference with Judge Hilton, following his unceremonious and resentful ejection from the undertaking parlors of Garrett & Company during the first few minutes of the inquest.

The verdict of the coroner's jury in the case of Jacob C. Denton, that death occurred about June 7 and that the probable cause of death was "strangulation by unknown causes."

Greatest Reception in History of London for "Ambassador-Prince"

By International News Service.

London, Oct. 11.—The greatest reception in the history of London was given today to the Prince of Wales upon his return home from his long tour to the Antipodes.

"I had a splendid time, but am happy to be back again," was the message of the Prince to the British people.

The business district of the city was decorated with flags and the streets were jammed with people. Even the roofs were crowded. Many had been until after midnight in thoroughfares and seats commanded $8 and $10.

The "Ambassador-Prince" had made a triumphal journey to London from Portsmouth, where he landed from the battleship Renown. The special train was greeted with cheers and salutes at every station.

At Victoria station the Prince was met by King George, Queen Mary, Princess Mary, officers of state and high military and naval officials. The station was gay with flags and flowers.

Two of the Prince's brothers came to London with him. They met the Renown before she docked. They are the Duke of York and Prince Henry.

DISCHARGED CARMEN MAY SUE FOR BACK PAY

Lawrence, Oct. 11.—Back wages are to be sought through legal process by twenty discharged carmen unless payment is made them by the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company at once. The men lost their jobs through conditions arising by the use of the one-man cars in Lawrence and suburbs. The wage sought is an extra amount due them on a retroactive award from September 1 to May 1 of this year, made by the Arbitration Board and Joint Conference Committee.

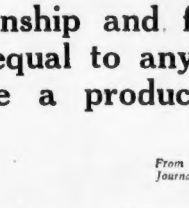
FAUST INSTANT COFFEE ADD BOILING WATER



"The workmanship and finish on the Cadillac are equal to anything extant, whether it be a product of Europe or America."

From The Motor—the National Motor Car Journal of Great Britain—of August 4, 1920

THE full force of this striking statement from an eminent English authority will be instantly apparent to anyone at all familiar with the fine motor cars of Europe. Its chief interest and importance consists in the fact that it places the Cadillac on a parity of excellence with the best European cars of very much higher price, whose reputation has rested upon the very points now conceded to the Cadillac.

Several of these cars have, indeed, sold hitherto for as much as three times the price of the Cadillac; but the same writer, in another part of his editorial, admits that the Cadillac has broken down the wall of prejudice existing in England against American cars.

"By reason of its up-to-date design," he says, "excellence of material and workmanship, and fine performance on the road, it has for some considerable time been generally accepted as one of the finest, if not the finest, of American models imported into this country."

Again, this same frank admirer corroborates the opinion of American army officers and observers generally, in pronouncing the Type 59 an even greater car than the great war Cadillac.

He lays stress on Cadillac progress and development during the past two years, emphasizing the experience gained in arduous war services, and pointing out that in many respects—including coachwork and greater driving comfort and luxury—the Cadillac shows marked advance over its own previous high standards.

He refers again and again to the beauty of the Cadillac and its enhanced charm of appearance, speaking of it in one instance as "giving the impression of a tasteful traveling boudoir on wheels."

The highly desirable changes of the past two years in the Cadillac, he quite properly describes as "the natural and considered outcome of extended experience."

"Regardless of price or size," he concludes, "the Model 59 Cadillac approaches the ideal (of perfection) as closely as any other car on the market today."

With distinguished foreign observers pronouncing the Cadillac the equal of their own costliest productions, which far exceed it in price, what need is there for us to impress upon appreciative Americans that the Type 59 Cadillac represents the greatest monetary motor car value in the world today?

United States in Need of More Foreign Trade

Recent trade reports show that this country's foreign trade is no longer increasing in the ratio that prevailed immediately after the war, to say nothing of its status during the duration of the great struggle. There are signs that the export pace is not being maintained, while imports are increasing. The foreign exchange situation is curtailing American markets abroad and while more importing will regulate rates as nothing else can do it is imperative for the maintenance of a favorable trade balance that far away business not only be held but extended.

This is a matter that is receiving a great deal of attention not only from manufacturers who require a foreign market for the disposal of surplus products, but of financiers who are seeking to extend American banking connections around the world. With some countries in Europe, notably England, just rehabilitating their industrial and commercial positions, it will not be long before American exporters face conditions where the sharpest competition will be a vital factor. Furthermore, Europe will be shipping to the American market more goods than have ever been sent across the Atlantic. Only the war prevented the United States from feeling under the existing tariff competition in the home markets to an unprecedented extent.

MUCH ADVANTAGE LOST.

Although it is said that the United States has lost already much of the advantage it possessed at the time of the armistice and for months thereafter, it certainly still stands in a better position than any rival. It has raw materials, capital and manufacturing facilities that are unequalled, and has made unprecedented strides in the development of a greatly needed merchant marine. Had the government been as farsighted and efficient as American business men and financiers, it is probable that this country would by this time been in a predominant world trade position.

Most travelers who return from Europe speak in commendation of what England has accomplished under great handicaps. In this connection what is said by the Guaranty Trust Company is most pertinent and as follows:

WHAT ENGLAND IS DOING.

"The amount of imports and exports of Great Britain is now running below the pre-war levels, notwithstanding the fact that values have increased approximately 172 per cent. In imports and 153 per cent. in exports for the eight months ended August, 1920. The estimated weight of imports for the eight months is 36,534,000 tons in 1913, 23,976,000 tons for 1919, and 29,954,000 tons in 1920. The estimated weight of the exports of United Kingdom products for the month of August, 1920, is 5,056,000 tons exclusive of 2,210,000 tons of coal, coke and manufactured fuel, which compares with 7,244,000 tons in August, 1913 including 6,673,000 tons of coal, coke and manufactured fuel. The exports other than coal, coke and manufactured fuel amounted, therefore, to 854,000 tons in August, 1920, and to 1,191,000 tons in August, 1913. All things considered, these figures show the remarkable recovery which has already been made by British industries."

PRESENT TRADE OF U. S.

But the present foreign trade of the United States is enormous and any great diminution of its exports would be keenly felt. As to what has been done this year alone is outlined by the National City Bank, which says:

"The trade of the United States with the war-sequestered countries—those which were cut off from international commerce as a result of the war—will aggregate more than a billion dollars in the calendar year, 1920. To the dozen countries with which our trade was necessarily suspended during the war period our exports in the calendar year 1920 will approximate $750,000,000, and our imports therefrom about $250,000,000. These dozen countries, as enumerated are Germany, Russia, Poland, Finland, Belgium, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Turkey.

"In the eight months for which we have official figures the imports from Germany amounted to $58,000,000 against $1,000,000 in the corresponding months of the preceding year, and our exports to Germany $166,000,000 against $23,000,000 in the same months of the preceding year. From Belgium our imports in the eight months' period amounted to $13,000,000 and our exports to that country $200,000,000. From Turkey in Europe the imports are $10,000,000 and the exports thereto $20,000,000, while from Turkey in Asia the imports are $20,000,000 and the exports thereto but about $5,000,000. To Poland and Danzig, which are combined in the official figures, the exports in the seven months ending with July, the latest figures available, are, in round terms, $60,000,000, and the imports therefrom a little less than $500,000,000. To Czecho-Slovakia the exports are $6,500,000, and the imports therefrom $5,500,000; to Jugo-Slavia the exports are a little over $500,000, and the imports therefrom extremely small; Russia, in Europe, $11,000,000 against about $7,000,000 in the same months of last year, and the imports therefrom about $1,500,000, while to Asiatic Russia the exports are $13,000,000, and the imports therefrom about $9,000,000. To Rumania the exports are, in round terms, $6,000,000 against $1,800,000, but the imports therefrom are small, while to Bulgaria the exports are $1,500,000 and the imports over $3,000,000. To Finland the exports of the period in question are $15,000,000 and the imports therefrom a little less than $2,000,000."

BOSTON MOULDERS DRAW NEW WAGE AGREEMENT

Delegates from ten unions affiliated with the Boston and vicinity conference board of the International Moulders' Union drew up a new wage agreement at No. 995 Washington street, which will be presented this week to the Boston Foundrymen's Association. The terms of the agreement were not announced. The men now receive 90 cents an hour, or $7.20 a day, on an agreement which expires on November 15, but calls for a thirty-days' notice in the event that either party desires to change it.

America's Fisheries—An Undeveloped Industry of Great Possibilities

In its rich fisheries the United States possesses an undeveloped natural resource which needs only organization, capital and brains to make it one of the nation's greatest industries.

The American fisheries have hitherto been conducted so inefficiently that fish as an important food staple has failed to win the nation-wide popularity and market it deserves. So crude has been the organization of our fisheries, particularly as regards distribution, that fish in sufficient quantities and of good quality has been unobtainable regularly by much of our inland population.

The U. S. Bureau of Fisheries states that there is a huge unsatisfied demand for fish, especially in the Middle West and South. An enormously rich field awaits the wide-awake concern which enters the fish industry properly organized and equipped. In England, where twenty-five years ago the fisheries were in as chaotic a state as here now, more capital is profitably employed in the fisheries than in the American beef industry. The American beef supply is decreasing, and the consumption of fish will constantly grow.

The problems of handling and distributing fish and beef are identical, and progressive concerns are meeting them the right way, equipped with ample capital, fleets of steam trawlers, big central plants and excellent merchandising systems. All honor to these companies for their far-sighted progressiveness!

BOSTON TENTH IN SHIPPING

U. S. Board Vessels Carried 20 Per Cent. of Exports and Imports in Year

By Universal Service.

Washington, Oct. 11.—The stupendous effort made by the United States Shipping Board to carry the American flag to every quarter of the seas is shown by the fact that during the fiscal year ending June 30 ships controlled by that organization alone transported 26,615,402 tons or 20 per cent. of all American exports and imports. These figures were made public by the shipping board.

In considering them it must be borne in mind that only during the latter part of the year was the board equipped with even approximately its present number of ships.

TOUCHED 49 AMERICAN PORTS.

Plying between forty-nine American ports and those of every country of importance, except Germany, Shipping Board vessels, the report says, transported 12,379,234 of the 43,115,711 tons of exports, and 7,-236,168 of the 26,470,551 tons of imports.

Of the 14,673,015 tons of imports during the last six months American vessels brought in 11,152,741, or practically 75 per cent. Shipping Board vessels were credited with 37 per cent. of this amount, or 4,220,802 tons.

Twenty-six of the forty-nine American ports handled 97 per cent. of all the incoming and outgoing commerce carried in shipping board vessels during the entire year. New York easily heads the list with 5,730,702 tons, or 25.9 of the total. Next in order were Baltimore, 2,985,465; Philadelphia, 2,061,258; New Orleans, 1,856,729; Norfolk, 1,250,125; San Francisco, 1,042,811; Newport News, 972,479; Savannah, 732,807; Seattle, 679,558, and Boston, 677,339.

WEST INDIES HEAD LIST.

The Caribbean and West Indies region head the list for cargo movements in which shipping board vessels figured. It relieved 2,012,905 tons of exports and furnished 4,890,974 tons of imports, or a total of 6,313,378 tons. This represents 30 per cent. of the total tonnage moved by shipping board boats. The tonnage of other leading regions follows:

European Atlantic, 3,925,369, or 19.05 per cent.; United Kingdom, 2,487,444, or 12.06 per cent.; Orient, 2,257,837, or 9.83 per cent.; Mediterranean, 1,914,022, or 5.28, and River Plate, 1,099,791, or 5.33 per cent.

Iceland is at the bottom of the list with 2.02 per cent., and is the only region which furnished none of America's imports. Twenty-four per cent. of the import tonnage handled by the Shipping Board was crude petroleum.

All Fat People

Easily Reduce

The world owes a debt of gratitude to the author of the now famous Marmola Prescription, and is still more indebted for the reduction of this harmless, effective, scientific remedy to tablet form. They are so convenient to take, and as pleasant as candy. One after each meal and at bedtime will quickly reduce your weight, two, three or four pounds a week, and leave no evil effects such as loose, flabby skin and unsightly wrinkles. Just go on eating what you like—leave exercise to the athletes—take your little tablet as directed and soon you will be your natural self, clothed in firm flesh and trim muscles. Marmola Prescription Tablets may now be obtained at all drug stores, or by writing direct to the Marmola Co., 92 Garfield Building, Detroit, Mich., and their reasonable price —one dollar for a good size box—leaves no excuse for dieting or violent exercise for the reduction of the overfat body to normal proportions.

New Hair Growth After BALDNESS

On legal affidavit, John Hart Brittain, business man, certified to this: "My head at the top and back was absolutely bald. The scalp was shiny. An expert said that he thought the hair roots were extinct, and there was no hope of my ever having a new hair growth. Two months, at an age over 60, I have a luxuriant growth of soft, strong, lustrous hair! No trace of baldness. The pictures shown here are from my photographs." Mr. Brittain credited further:

INDIAN'S SECRET OF HAIR GROWTH

"At a time when I had become discouraged at trying various hair lotions, tonics, specialists' treatments, etc., I came across, in my travels, a Cherokee Indian 'medicine man' who had an elixir that he guaranteed would grow my bald head hair. Although I had but little faith, I gave it a trial. To my amazement a light fuzz soon appeared. It developed, day by day, into a healthy growth, and are long my hair was as profuse as in my youthful days.

That I was astonished and happy in expressing my state of mind mildly, Obviously, the hair roots had not been dead, but were dormant in the scalp, awaiting the fertilizing potency of the mysterious pomade. I negotiated for and came into possession of the principals for preparing this mysterious elixir, now called Kotalko, and later had the recipe put into practical form by a chemist.

That my own hair growth was pure fact has been amply proved."

How YOU May Grow YOUR Hair

It has been proved in very many cases that hair roots did not die even when the hair fell out through dandruff, fever, Marvelous results certain other hair or scalp disorders. Miss A. D. Otis reports: "About 8 years ago my hair began to fall out until my scalp in spots was almost entirely bald. I used everything that was recommended but was always disappointed, until at last I came across Kotalko. My bald spots are being covered now; the growth is already about three inches." G. W. Mitchell reports: "I had used nearly a complete set of which hair is now growing since I used Kotalko." Mrs. Matilda Maxwell reports: "The whole front of my head was as bald as the palm of my hand for about 15 years. Now, quite a good head of hair is growing all over the place that was bald." Many more splendid reports from satisfied users.

PRISONER NUMBER 9653

Eugene V. Debs Tells Norman Hapgood That He Sees a Broader Socialist-Labor Party Coming in the United States

Norman Hapgood, former United States Minister to Denmark, famous editor, author and critic, has interviewed in the Atlanta penitentiary, Eugene V. Debs, Socialist candidate for President, who is "Prisoner No. 9653." In the interview Debs's abhorrence of violence to achieve his principles is clearly shown. This is the third installment.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD.

Copyright, 1920, by Star Company.

Debs is most eager to be at liberty. In moments of contempt for governments, or of feeling for the wrongs done to many simple men, he may say he would rather stay in until all come out—father die there, if need be. But the other impulse conquers. He wants to be in the great fight. He longs to be free to deliver the truth, his truth, to thousands of his fellow-men, and face to face. He is not a man who belongs apart, in a study or in a cell. He loves men, masses of men, and wants to look into their upturned faces and pour out what is in his soul. He is their candidate for the Presidency, and the United States government, on the flimsy pretext of an outworn war-power, shuts him in a prison on the eve of an election.

Does it know what it is doing for the class war in this country? Does it know what it is doing to make common men laugh scornfully when such words as law and justice and order are spoken? Time and again I have been astonished this Summer and Autumn when men and women I know well have told me they intended to vote for Debs, though they had no belief whatever in the theories of Karl Marx. They opined that Marx had been dead a good while and that a good many things had happened and that the world would have to struggle on toward fairness by many different routes—but they were going to vote for Debs.

This tendency may not show on a big scale in this election because the majority are still drugged, but those who are free to think are the advance guard, and there is a deluge coming soon. I have reasons that seem to me good for voting with the one of the two big parties that I prefer to have win, but even so I felt like a cowardly conservative as I listened to the stream of generous feeling and tolerant thought that flowed from the rich personality of the imprisoned candidate of a party that will sweep half the countries of Europe in the first elections that are held on real issues.

FORWARD MOVEMENT REVIVAL.

Debs talked about a revival of a forward movement after this election is behind us. He thinks it is coming strong and soon, and coming through a broader party than labor and Socialism have been able to organize before. I asked him if it would be in general like the British Labor Party, and he was inclined to think it might be. He was not sure, however, that well-to-do men of radical tendencies could co-operate as much here with the labor elements as they do in England, and he rather thought the lack of cohesion in the Democratic Forty-eight at Chicago was an illustration of this difficulty. We talked of men like Walter Lanell Brailsford and Wedgwood, who work with the Labor Party in England, and Debs spoke the most enthusiastic eulogy to Norman Angell's analyses of war and its consequences. Turning to the intellectual situation in America, he stated me if I knew Professor Herron. I did not. He narrowed as he considered the bitter persecution of this Socialist of the educated class and said the newspapers had killed Mrs. Herron.

Seeing that we could never cover all our ground in the allotted time I asked Debs if there were any books in which readers of this interview could follow up for themselves his career and his beliefs. He said there were just two that he would recommend—the collection of speeches published in Kansas about ten years ago and the life by his friend Kerner, published this year. "They give about all there is to it," he said, with a humor that was not in his words, but in the expression of his face and voice. "All there is to it." A modest man is Debs, not the less because, like many a man whose education has come from his personal experience, he tells much and with earnest insistence of the battles of his life.

LABOR IN A FOG.

I wish those who persecute this kindly and pleasant bread leader and of the struggling many might have heard him as he talked about the troubles that labor has in groping its way to responsibility. "Our hardest task," he said, "is not the defeat of capitalism. That would be easy if we could first conquer ourselves, determine our course, confide in one another. Labor is wandering in a fog. Is it to be wondered at, when you remember that this is the first time in the history of the world that the masses, on a large scale, have undertaken to settle their own destiny? A laboring man is by nature distrustful. He distrusts everybody. He distrusts other laboring men. And he has good cause to distrust them."

Here Debs again sketched the treachery, the ever-present informer and hired, secret provoker of discord and violence, and made me see afresh the terrible hidden and powerful wires that the enemy of labor is able to run through the humblest room in which working men gather together to grope their way toward the government of themselves. From this long, heart-breaking experience have emerged the guiding principles of Debs' teachings and Debs' life. They are these:

VIOLENCE HARMFUL.

Secret work is futile. Violence is harmful.

The great first goal is to keep labor together, to prevent its diversion. Consequently, though Debs is opposed to violence himself, he will not make an enemy of the man whose despair drives him to violence. He will welcome as comrades all who seek the same goal.

Opposition does not embitter him. Combat with him is a contest for sweetness and light.

That is the great, fine thing about Debs. Nothing embitters him. Injustice, oppression, persecution, savagery do not embitter him. It is a stirring, an uplifting thing to find a man who has suffered so much and remains so ardent and so pure. I wish we had a Zola to do him justice; to awaken the country until it cared to insist that the persecution of him end.

(The fourth instalment will be published in The American, Wednesday.)

HARVARD HAS 459 MORE STUDENTS THAN IN 1919

Registration figures announced at Harvard today show an enrollment of 5,461, a few shy of the record for the institution, but still 459 more than were registered last year. Late comers are expected to bring the total enrollment to 5,500, but the officials of the university are inclined to doubt that the record mark of 5,656 in 1916 will be surpassed.

The freshman class shows a gain over the figures of 1919. There has been an advance of eighty-six men, the total for the yearling enrollment being 623 men.

DOCTORS SAY CONSTIPATION POISONS SYSTEM

Mrs. Boyce Tells Her Experience

The majority of people suffer from constipation, which poisons the whole system and causes coated tongues, bad headaches, foul breath, in children often results in high fever and actual illness.

These conditions may be quickly relieved by Dr. True's Elixir—the Family Laxative that has worked wonders for men, women and children since 1851.

"I have great faith in your Dr. True's Elixir. I give it to my boy, it is doing him much good and I would not be without a bottle for anything." Mrs. Joseph Boyce (Tracey Station, N. B.)

You know the symptoms of chronic constipation—sour stomach, belching, bad breath, heavy, dull eyes, constant headaches, and general out-of-sorts, grouchy feeling. Then why not let Dr. True's Elixir help you? Dr. True's Elixir, the Family Laxative and Worm Expeller, is mild and pleasant to take and works just right for children and adults. Advertisement.

SINGER PRAISES U. S. MODISTES

American Gowns Are Now as Smart as the French, Says Rae Samuels

Rae Samuels, the rapid-fire ragtime singer, will have a field day in Jimmie Hussey's Revue, which opens at the Globe tonight, and will have a chance to wear a dazzling array of up-to-the-minute gowns.

Despite the Frenchiness of Miss Samuels' costumes she wants it understood that they were designed by Americans. Furthermore, she thinks our dressmakers can get the Parisians one better and that the supremacy of Paris as far as women's wear goes has departed.

"It was not that the French were better dressmakers, or their materials better but it was because the French costumers had more daring. They built their dresses assuming that only beautiful women would wear them, while the American dressmakers knew very well that their customers were more apt to be ugly than beautiful.

"The result has been that the homely women insisted upon wearing the daring costumes designed by the French for beauties, no matter how ridiculous they might appear in them. It was simply human nature.

"Our dressmakers took advantage of the war to become daring as the French ever tried to be, and as a result I can get as wonderful costumes in New York as in Paris."

DIAZ REVOLT IN MEXICO STARTS

Sympathizers in Vera Cruz Serve Notice They Will Blow Up Trains

By Universal Service.

Vera Cruz, Mexico, Oct. 11.—A revolution against the present Mexican government, because it ordered General Felix Diaz to leave Mexico, is budding today at Alotenango and Cosomaloapec, both in the State of Vera Cruz.

Air Alotenango soldiers who formerly served under Diaz have issued a manifesto in which they state that they have started a revolution and that they will blow up trains and commit other depredations.

A telegram from Cosomaloapec says that 3,000 well armed and equipped men have raised the banner of Diaz in hostility to the present administration, which, they declare, has treated Diaz basely.

John Cerulli, No. 93 P street, South Boston, was arraigned in the South Boston court today charged with keeping and exposing liquor and the sale of liquor. Disguised as a fisherman, John Barrett of the motor squad entered Cerulli's place Sunday morning, saying that ten fellow fishermen were nursing big heads aboard a vessel. He put $10 on the counter and received a quart of whiskey. At the moment of the sale Sergeant Wheeler and Captain John J. Rooney entered and started a search which revealed three gallons of whiskey.

1000 Eggs in Every Hen

New System Of Poultry Keeping—Get Dollar A Dozen Eggs—Famous Poultryman TELLS HOW

"The great trouble with the poultry business has always been that the laying life of a hen was too short," says Henry Stafford, International Poultry Expert and Breeder, for nearly eighteen years Editor of Poultry Success.

Hens are naturally layers for 120 eggs. If kept the second year, she may lay 100 eggs, and even more in exceptional cases. Yet it has been scientifically established that hens hatched in mid or late winter months, and given the right kind of care in the right system and with the right kind of feeding, will lay from 200 to 250 eggs in their first year. The system at present in vogue, the cost of which will be sent free to any reader who writes for it, and signs his name and address, is based on the old hens for their winter eggs. The result big profit to the poultry keeper. Mr. Stafford calls his system "The Laying Hen Method." If you keep chickens and want eggs, you should write for this free book at once. Address Henry Stafford, 1 Stafford Building, Binghamton, N. Y., and a copy will be sent by return mail.

MIXED TREND IN BOSTON

Prices Irregular Here and Market Is Dull; Curb Fails to Hold Strength

Irregularity characterized the Boston list when the local exchange began business and the price movement here was indefinite all the morning. Many issues were unchanged at the opening and the market was as dull and narrow as it has been for weeks. It was almost featureless during the first hour. Sugars were neglected, little was done in coppers, packing issues were weak as well as quiet in early dealings. Gorton-Pew was a little more active than usual. It opened at a small loss and made a small gain later. Swift & Co. advanced a point and Waltham Watch declined one. New River gained three points on an initial transaction. New England rails were dormant.

Small gains were achieved by American Woolen preferred, United Shoe, Ventura, New England Telephone, Orpheum, Bigheart and Loew's. Inc. Among issues to recede fractionally were United Drug first preferred, National Leather, Carson Hill, Elder, New Cornelia and Eastern Steamship.

CURB STARTED STRONG.

The Curb market had a strong start, early gains in the majority of nearly two to one. But there were ... after the tone quickly and it soon became irregular. Most of the active issues receded. Leaders included Boston & Montana and Merrimac Development. Strong issues at the opening were Acme Coal, Allied Mining, Arizona Silver, Mutual, Republic Navigation and Seven Metals. Weak ones were Crystal, Merrimac and Ranier.

At the end of an hour Merrimac was up 1 cent at 27 cents and Mutual 1 cent at 41 cents. Declines included Arizona Tip Top, 1 cent at 11 cents; Bagdad, 1 cent at 19 cents; Crystal, 2 cents at 32 cents; Denbigh, 1 cent at 16 cents, and Ranier, 10 cents at 35 cents.

Is Your Money Earning Over 8%?

If your money is not earning 8% or more, you should not miss the opportunity now presented to secure that return through purchase of the shares of some of America's soundest dividend-paying corporations.

This abnormal yield is brought about by the decline which has occurred in the stock market, due to industrial deflation, but inasmuch as the securities we have in mind are bound to advance to levels more in keeping with their intrinsic worth when the market turns, the present opportunity should be taken advantage of immediately.

A circular we have just published outlines the one best selection in the railroad, equipment, food, oil, tobacco, and copper groups, and this circular with booklet explaining the Ten Payment Plan will be sent without obligation.

Latest Gold Receipts

The latest gold receipts from Europe to this country arrived on the Cunard steamship Acquitania on Saturday and consisted of 376 boxes of bars. The total value of the shipment was not stated but the forty-one boxes consigned to Kuhn, Loeb & Co. represented $2,050,000. One box of gold was a private order. It is understood that 334 boxes were consigned to the New York Federal Reserve Bank. It was officially announced in London at the end of the week that gold shipments to the United States during the week ended October 6 totaled $12,671,875.

Ten Held in Gaming Raid

Gloucester, Oct. 11.—Ten young men rounded up in Essex for being present at gaming on the Lord's Day gave their names as David Gosbee, Lawrence Caverly, Horace Story, Everett Leader, Ralph Yates, Edwin Burnham, Elmer Haskins, Lee Singer, Lawrence Goodman and Francis Jardin.

Boston Financial Notes

Production for the first nine months of this year by the Ventura Consolidated Oil Fields amounted to 1,026,650 barrels of oil, an increase of 201,644 barrels, or nearly 25 per cent, over the corresponding 1919 period.

September copper production by Calumet & Arizona was 3,038,000 pounds, that of New Cornelia was 3,314,000 pounds and that of North Butte 1,434,159 pounds.

Dedham, Mass., will receive proposals until 4:30 p. m., Oct. 13, for $70,000 of 5 per cent. school bonds, dated November 1 and payable $3,500 on November 1, in each of years 1921 to 1940 inclusive.

The Emerson Shoe Company of Rockland, Mass., which is now filling an order for 100,000 pair of shoes for the navy, has received a contract to make 50,000 pairs for U. S. Marines.

The Arlington Mills at Lawrence is operating at close to capacity, although most other worsted plants are curtailing operations. It employs 7,100 hands and will probably do in 1920 a gross business of $35,000,000. Its 1919 gross was $27,000,000.

The reserve ratio of the Boston Federal Reserve Bank last week was 53.1 against 52.8 for the week before.

CARRIERS LED IN ACTIVITY

Sugars, Oils, Steels and Motors Recede; Rails Make the Best Showing

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were rather weak in New York at noon, a recession being in force most of the time during the forenoon. Rails were irregular, but made the best showing. They led in activity. Sugars were weak and attracted especial attention because of trouble in Havana which necessitated the declaration of a moratorium by the Cuban treasury. This may be taken advantage of by any bank in Cuba. Steels, oils and motors were down. Leathers were weak, Central Leather selling at its lowest since 1916 and Hide & Leather preferred at its lowest since 1918.

Mexican Oil was erratic, ranging from more than two points loss to an advance of almost five. Call money opened at 7½ per cent. First hour transactions totaled about 130,000 shares. Foreign exchange rates were lower, opening quotations being demand sterling $3.49½, off ⅛ cents; francs $.0661, off $.0004; lire $.0408, unchanged; marks $.0156, off $.0001.

DECLINED AT OUTSET.

Prices declined at the outset, losses extending through the list. Initial fluctuations were small but the recession continued for thirty minutes before the movement slackened. Texas & Pacific opened unchanged and then sagged three points before there was enough demand to cause a halt. It soon sold at a new low for two years. It was the only early feature. Rails in general sustained fractional losses. Union Pacific and New York Central were the weakest high priced carriers in early trading. Steels, oils, equipments and motors sought a lower level. Sugars were quiet, but Punta Alegre dropped a point on its first transaction. Cuba Cane was still weaker. Mexican Petroleum began a trifle higher, but was off two points a little later. Among other issues to recede a point or more during the first hour were Royal Dutch, Republic Steel and Stromberg. Most of the over-Sunday orders were to sell. U. S. Steel opened fractionally lower, but soon recovered. It was not particularly active. Its decrease in unfilled tonnage was a little less than Wall Street expected.

LATEST BANK STATEMENTS.

The latest bank statements are satisfactory in the main, especially that by New York Clearing House banks. It shows an increase of $47,243,830 in surplus reserve for last week. As to Federal Reserve banks, the reserve ratio of the system is 42.9 against 43.7 a week before. A decrease was looked for when crop moving neared the apex. The New York bank's ratio dropped from 41.1 to 38.5. The Boston ratio is 53.1, the highest in the country. The weakness of the stock market is no longer directly blamed for the money situation, but rather upon business retrogression. The trade situation is due chiefly, however, to credit restrictions. The Anglo-French loan matures on Friday, but should have no disturbing influence, according to what is said in banking quarters. But there will be considerable mid-month shifting of funds on that date and money may be tighter for a day or two.

Wall Street Briefs

The Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad has declared operative its refinancing plan to care for its $15,000,000 of one-year notes due by extension Sept. 1, 1920.

Stockholders of the Columbia Graphophone Manufacturing Co. will hold a special meeting on Oct. 27 to vote on the proposed increase in authorized common capital from 1,500,000 to 3,000,000 shares. It is not intended, according to President Whitten, to issue any of the stock at this time. He also said the company does not contemplate any financing as it appears that it has sufficient funds on hand to meet its requirements.

Cotton Market Opening

New York, Oct. 11.—The cotton market opened irregular, near months showing weakness, while later deliveries were steady, the entire initial range being from 35 points lower to 11 points higher. Heavy hedge pressure, with reports of very fine weather in the belt over Sunday and weak cables, caused most of the heaviness in near months. Buying by the trade sustained the distant months. After the start near months became steadier and rallied about 25 points from the first levels. Opening prices were: October, 22.05; December, 20.70; January, 20.10; March, 20; May, 20.05; June, 19.70; July, 19.70; August, 19.50.

Chicago Grain Market

Chicago, Oct. 11.—Wheat opened 3c to 4c higher. Corn opened ⅝c to 1¼c higher. Oats were ⅛c to ⅝c higher. Provisions were 5c lower for lard and 25c lower for ribs. Opening prices were: Wheat—December, 2.00 to 2.03; March, 1.96½ to 1.98½. Corn—December, 86 to 86½; May, 89¾. Oats—December, 56¼ to 56⅝; May, 60½ to 60⅝. Lard—October, 19.75; January, 18.90. Ribs—January, 15.10.

TEXAS JUNIOR OIL CO.

The Stock of Which Company Is Offered Until Oct. 15, 1920, at

15c per share

Company has seven wells either producing or awaiting pipe line connection, which we understand is the source of a fancy income, making the stock a reasonably safe investment besides the unusual speculative possibilities offered by well scattered holdings and drilling operations now under way. The management is striving to increase the production, which will automatically enlarge the dividend rate. In addition to the above, we understand a deal was recently closed for additional acreage and production.

We suggest the immediate purchase of Texas Junior stock, believing it to be a real oil opportunity. Until Wednesday, Oct. 15th, we will fill orders at 15c a share.

Output of Arizona Mines

The United States Geological Survey estimates the value of the 1919 output of mines in Arizona at $111,157,872, as compared with $202,134,880 for 1918. Copper production in the State amounted to 538,100,844 pounds, against 764,855,874 the previous year; silver, 5,266,605 ounces, compared with 6,686,152 in 1918, and lead, 10,203,078 pounds, against 12,503,689 the previous year.

Tampico statistics show that September oil exports by Mexico totalled 17,000,000 barrels. This is a high record for a month. The increase over August was 1,700,000 barrels.

BIG DEALS DUE IN WALL STREET

Constructive Influence Is Found in Government's Report of Great Crops

By BROADAN WALL.
(Registered, U. S. Patent Office.)

New York, Oct. 11.—Money transactions of unusual importance are to be made in Wall Street this week, and every little trader is short of something, hoping for the bottom to drop out of the market.

There has been considerable liquidation in the last week, due to business uncertainty. Traders have taken full advantage of the situation. The stock market, therefore, is not in bad technical condition.

A constructive influence is found in the government report of large crops. In fact, the leading railroad men believe that within a month they can begin borrowing money on fair terms for the purchase of equipment and rails.

According to the government report there will be 3,216,192,000 bushels of corn, 750,000,000 bushels of wheat, 1,444,000,000 bushels of oats, besides a very large crop of potatoes. Canada will have more than a quarter of a billion bushels of wheat. Because most of Canada's wheat must be transported by water, it is being rushed for export and has broken the market for spot wheat to such an extent that American farmers are getting less for their crops than the cost of production. This is restraining the buying of all kinds of commodities. Its first influence is seen in the automobile trade and in the business of the mail order houses. The farmers were the best customers of these two industries.

BIG COPPER PRODUCERS QUOTE LOWER PRICE

In an effort to obtain a market for their metal big copper producers offered it last week as low as 17½ cents a pound, the figure quoted by small dealers a few days before. It is said, however, that the reduction has failed to create any increased demand. Second-hands are said to be now offering small quantities at 17¼ cents a pound. Price cutting has unsettled the market still further. Wire mills have cancelled orders for copper recently.

It is said in mining circles that copper cannot be sold at 17 to 18 cents a pound with much profit even by lowest cost producers. Such a figure would mean an actual loss to many others.

Wool Shipments and Receipts

Shipments of wool from Boston, according to the Commercial Bulletin, from January 1 to October 17, inclusive, this year amounted to 120,599,250 pounds, against 105,409,757 pounds for the like period last year. The receipts were 385,408,794 pounds, against 351,592,806 pounds.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it for the blood and they become sore, paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the poisonous waste, else you have backache, a headache, dizzy spells, sour stomach, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, watery scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Harding to Sweep Hub, Poll Indicates

Senator Harding may carry Boston.

The returns on the Boston American's occupational poll on the Presidency point emphatically to a Harding sweep in this city.

These returns indicate that all local political traditions will be upset. They indicate that the issue of the League of Nations has smashed the Democratic majority which party leaders have always looked for to balance the Republican vote in other sections of Massachusetts.

BURKE PLEASING LYRIC TENOR

Tom Burke, a tenor from the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London, who is making a concert tour of the country under the guidance of William Morris, the vaudeville manager, sang in Symphony Hall last night.

The auditorium was about half filled, but the audience made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in numbers.

Burke is a heavily built, but prepossessing chap. It was evident from the start that he was well versed in Italian operatic methods and his program ran rather to Italian operatic airs than songs.

He pleased the audience with one group of Irish songs and sang as an encore McCormack's standby, "Mother Machree."

Mr. Burke is the owner of a really lovely lyric tenor. He not only has ringing top notes, but the high falsetto so dear to the Irish. The only criticism of his Irish number would be that he sings them a bit perfunctorily.

I think it would be a treat to hear him as the Duke in "Rigoletto" or Rodolfo in "Boheme" for his is the ideal tonal quality for such roles.

SUICIDE'S CASH IN CLOSED BANK

Chelsea Dock Laborer Ends Life by Inhaling Gas Through Tube

Despondent, it is claimed by neighbors, because he had money in the Chelsea Ticket Office operated by Jas. ore Whitman and closed by Bank Commissioner Allen, Frederick H. Thiele, fifty years old, ended his life by inhaling gas.

Thiele, who was a laborer at the Charlestown and East Boston docks, was found in his home at No. 135 Arlington street, Chelsea, with a gas tube in his mouth and the gas turned on. He died later at the Frost Hospital.

1,300 POLICEMEN TO PARADE TOMORROW

Approximately 1,300 police officers will parade tomorrow. The remainder of the department's 1,624 men will be assigned along the route and to guard the city.

A general order has been issued permitting all veterans of the late war to wear service medals and buttons on their uniforms. This means that about 80 per cent of the force will wear war insignia if they so desire. Medals must be placed in line with the department badge, while special books have been sewed on the collar for the service button.

Curious About Mentho Laxene

FIRST DOSE PROVES IT

Mentho-Laxene has been on the market ten years. It is a concentrated compound of healing, soothing, curative extracts to be mixed at home with granulated sugar syrup —a full pint—or it may be taken in doses of ten drops in the "raw" state by those who do not like sweet syrup.

The very first dose brings wonderful relief in head or chest colds of children or adults. Every bottle sold is guaranteed to please or money back by The Rin-Likum Products Co., Dayton, Ohio.

It is economy to make a full pint. Much cheaper than buying ready-made cough or cold remedies—besides, you could buy a more effective medicine anywhere, the bottle will last a season for most families, and it checks or aborts a bad cold if taken promptly, and for cough, sore throat, hoarseness, whooping cough, bronchitis, etc., there is nothing more effective than Mentho-Laxene. Insist upon genuine Mentho-Laxene—refuse substitutes—for your sake. Remember that 4,000 barrels were used last year. That proves its virtue!—Advertisement.

MISS LA MORT IS NOT LIKE NAME

"Florodora" Player Proves She Isn't a "Dead One"; Began in Chorus

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Imelda La Mort.

Holding second place on the program of the gorgeous revival of "Florodora" at the Opera House was the name of Imelda La Mort as playing Pasquita.

It fascinated me, that name, particularly as I was a bit late and Pasquita had been and gone. Mort, as anybody who ever looked in a French dictionary knows, is French for dead, death, dead one. And here was a girl whose last name meant "the dead one." What her first name meant was a mystery. And it still is.

To think was to act, like Jack Dalton, and emulating that celebrated person, I went right out and hunted up the manager. The idea was this: If Imelda was a dead one what was she doing with such a snappy entertainment, and if she wasn't, why did she stand for that name.

HAD QUEENLY AIR.

Sure, the manager would take me behind and introduce me. We went back upon the stage where once the great melodies of grand opera—but enough of that.

"Wants to see La Mort," said the manager to the stage director.

"La Mort," called the stage director.

The last time those words rang across the Boston Opera stage Mary Garden uttered them in the third act of "Carmen," when she flung the pack of cards on the ground. Though I think she said "La Mort." I wouldn't be sure. My French genders were always uneasy.

Miss La Mort was standing in a very gorgeous evening gown cut so low that Cleopatra would have thought it satisfactory. And she looked like Cleopatra, too, or at least Theda Bara's idea of Cleopatra. She wore a couple of jewels on her forehead and her air was queenly.

"This is a reporter. He wants to interview you," said the stage manager, and retreated.

18 SP, LOUIS GIRL.

"Ah," said Miss La Mort, smiling with great dignity. "How do you do. Was there something in particular? You could see interviews were every day occurrence with her and that she had probably been interviewed by experts.

"Well, I wanted to ask where you got that name?"

"Indeed," she replied with some hauteur. "Part of it is a stage name, Imelda is my own name.

"Are you French, Miss La Mort?"

"No," she replied. "I come from St. Louis."

"How did you happen to pick Mort for a stage name. Did you know what it means?"

Miss La Mort drew herself up and her regard was icy. "Certainly. It means death."

"Did you wish to kill anyone?"

The actress relaxed and permitted a smile to cross her countenance. "I was younger by three years when I took it, and I was probably romantic," she explained. "I have often thought of changing it but I am known now by that name and it would not be well."

"How long have you been in the stage?"

"Three years. I work six months and rest six months, you know."

WON PROMOTION.

"How nice. Have you been with Florodora since it started?"

"This time, you mean, of course?" "Of course."

"I joined the chorus, went into the sextet, and then was promoted to the role of Pasquita."

"Well, where did you get Imelda. Your parents must have had some imagination."

"Mamma was educated in a convent and so was there had that name. I do not know what it means."

"What was your regular name?"

"It was Butts. Miss La Mort was becoming annoyed by all these questions so I changed the subject.

"How do you like Boston?"

"Really I have been so busy I haven't had a chance to look around. It is my first visit to your city. I understand it has many historical places."

"Many," said I, and the interview was over.

RIVAL SOLDIER BOY BOXERS READY FOR CHAMPIONSHIP BOUT

KLOBY AND SIEGAL TO MINGLE

Bout Is Scheduled for Ten Rounds, but Each Boy Hopes to Shorten It

By JACK CONWAY.

The 26th against the 82d! Young Kloby will carry the colors of New England's famous fighting unit when he clashes with Nate Siegal, a member of the 82d Division, in a ten-round bout at Braves Field tomorrow afternoon.

It will be a novelty to see two star boxers with brilliant army records in a ring. When Uncle Sam needed fighting men, most of our so-called ring warriors decided that life in a shipyard or munitions factory was much safer and a great deal more profitable than that of a two-fisted fighting man on the battle front in France.

Kloby and Siegal, however, believe that there is something greater in life than the safety of one's physical parts or of the accumulation of wealth. So they enlisted and went to France in the infantry. They took their chances along with millions of other American youths and came home better fitted to carry on in civilian life.

Kloby a Sensation Since Coming Home

Kloby has been the sensation of the ring since he returned from France. His terrific punching power has enabled him to knock out most of his opponents. Once the dear old chimes sound for the opening of the first round, Kloby is the most active individual in the well known universe. He keeps driving after his opponent all the time. And when he catches up with him it is usually a case of the referee giving an exhibition of counting.

Wounded Soldiers to Witness Bout

There will be 200 wounded soldiers from the Parker Hill Hospital at the ringside. They are buddies of Kloby and Siegal. President John E. Mahoney of the Yannoll A. C. considered it a privilege to be permitted to send an invitation to these men who risked their all in the great adventure. Yeorge Gilbody, a Y. D. veteran, will have personal charge of the wounded men's room.

Fenway A. A. to Hold Show

The Fenway A. A. also has a show billed for this week. On Thursday night Abe Friedman and Danny Kramer will settle their ring differences. There is considerable rivalry between this pair and they are expected to put up a torrid engagement.

Friedman bosses Roy Moore at Rochester tonight. He will then hie back to Boston and complete training for his tussle with Kramer. Friedlatter's ability to put over the big wallop has made him a favorite with the fans. Danny, however, will have his troubles scoring Thursday night as Friedman is one of the nittiest boys in the bantamweight class.

Carlson and Fruzetti Battle Thursday

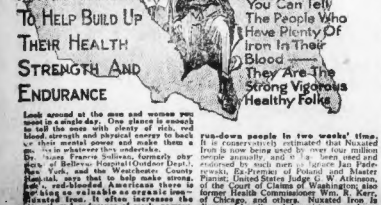
Harry Carlson and Jimmy Fruzetti, Brockton rivals, will furnish the excitement in a ten-round bout at the Quincy Boxing Club Thursday night. When these boys met at Brockton on Labor Day, Carlson won a battling decision. Fruzetti is now out to even the score or he wants to get a match with Frankie (Young) Britt for the lightweight championship of New England.

Shaver O'Brien to Box at Portsmouth

Shaver O'Brien of South Boston will hop up to Portsmouth, N. H., Thursday night to give battle with Young Pooler, who has been winning a flock of battles in New Hampshire and Maine rings. Shaver has won his last two starts, walloping Young Quill and Billy Carney, and believes he carries too many guns for Pooler.

Saints Beat Orioles

Baltimore, Oct. 11.—St. Paul defeated Baltimore yesterday, 5 to 4, in the fourth game of the interleague series.



Look around at the men and women you meet in the street. One glance is enough to tell the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Dr. Sharp Frances Sullivan, formerly of 907 Bellevue Hospital Outdoor Dept., New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says that to help make strong, rich, red-blooded Americans there is nothing so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over four million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Ex-Judge Jan Padewski, Ex-Premier of Poland and Master Pianist; United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Claims of Washington, also former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, and others. Nuxated Iron is sponsored by all good druggists everywhere.

Renato Gardini to Wrestle Charley Cutler

Promoter Louis Daro and, above, Zulu Havumpaa.

Renato Gardini, Boston's famous heavyweight wrestler, will receive plenty of opposition when he clashes with Charley Cutler of Chicago, former American heavyweight champion, in a finish match at the Scenic Temple tomorrow night under the direction of Lou Daro.

Gardini arrived in this city today from the Middle West, where he engaged in five winning battles. It will be Gardini's first bout here since his victory over Bill Demetral of Chicago at the Revere Cycle Track.

Cutler is also on the scene of the contest and is of the opinion that he will pin Gardini's shoulders to the mat tomorrow night. The Chicago star is well known to local fans as he has engaged in some of his best bouts in this city. Like Gardini, Cutler is out to secure another tussle with Stecker and believes that the best way to realize his ambition is to score a victory at the holiday show at Scenic Temple.

Havumpaa Opposed by Michailoff

Zulu Havumpaa, the "Peaceful Finn," will have Ivan Michailoff as an opponent in one of the preliminaries. Whoever gave Havumpaa the nickname of "Peaceful Finn" didn't have much regard for accuracy as Zulu is one of those fiery individuals who is always pulling the unexpected when engaged in a bout. Michailoff, however, is just as rough as his rival and has an idea he is going to come through with a win.

At Gardens of Roxbury and Young Muldoon of New York will mingle in the opening preliminary.

Reservations may be obtained today from Lou Daro at the American House on Hanover street, and at Scenic Temple tomorrow.

MURCHISON MAY QUIT N. Y. FOR ILLINOIS A. C.

St. Louis Oct. 11.—Loren Muchison, who has returned to St. Louis to live since his return from Antwerp with the United States Olympic team, announces that he probably will run for the Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago this Winter. Murchison is a sprinter and for the past year was a representative of the New York Athletic Club.

He will depart for Chicago this week and while in that city will confer with the I. A. C. officials. This move comes as a surprise, as Murchison had announced before departing for Europe that he would be affiliated with the Epsilon Eta Club, St. Louis chapter, this year.

By CHARLES E. PARKER.

Old Doc Dope is feeling pretty perky today for Saturday proved the best twenty-four hours Doc has enjoyed since post helium football got under way. Every football favorite came through its contest arm in arm with victory, and only in the playing of a limited number of the contests did the winners fall of expectations.

Harvard and Yale, although winning their contests by a comfortable margin, failed to perform in inspiring fashion, and Yale particularly was fortunate in holding North Carolina scoreless. Pittsburgh was also scored upon and caused many a worry by West Virginia—and this year, it should be remembered, West Virginia does not boast a Rodgers. But the outstanding case in which a winning college failed of expectations came in Penn State-Dartmouth battle, for except for a few brief five minutes in that game the crippled Hanover team forced the going.

Dartmouth Errors Saved Penn State

A fumble on Penn State's five-yard line, and the miscueing of two attempts at a field goal, stood between Dartmouth and a 13-point lead in the first half and Penn State owes its victory either to a reality play, or to faulty execution of a sound play, namely the forward pass that Killinger of Penn State intercepted and carried fifty yards a minute and a half before the final whistle blew.

The statistics of the game show Dartmouth to have gained 213 yards in rushing and forward passing, as against 204 gained by Penn State; to have run back kicks 125 yards to Penn State's 87; to have gained 47 yards by blocking punts and intercepting forward passes, to the 14 yards similarly gained by Penn State, and to have averaged 31 yards in punts, as against 30 1-2 yards by Penn State.

Last Auto Race of Year Tomorrow

The last auto racing event of the season will take place at Combination Park, Medford, tomorrow afternoon where plenty of thrills are promised. Among the entries are "Wild Bill" Endicott, the noted speedster from Indianapolis, another is Joe Dumas, a native of France, who is banking his chances on an American made car, a Briscoe Special.

Eight races, for which trophies and cash prizes are given, will make up the program. The Ajax trophy undoubtedly will be the most coveted prize that will be raced for tomorrow afternoon.

HORSES START A 300-MILE TEST

Left Fort Ethan Allen for Camp Devens at an Early Hour Today

Burlington, Vt., Oct 11.—An uphill, down-hill cross country jog of three hundred miles to test the endurance of twenty-two of the nation's strongest and purest-bred horses is on today. This is the second annual endurance test instituted by the United States army to stimulate interest in the breeding of chargers for the military. The horses started at daybreak from Fort Ethan Allen and will wind up Friday at Camp Devens.

TRIPLE GOLF BILL FOR ARLMONT CLUB PLAYERS

A triple golf bill is offered tomorrow to members of the Arlmont Golf Club in Arlington Heights. In the morning the play will be an 18-hole handicap medal, and a medal play, best nine holes, will be played in the afternoon. A driving contest on selected tee is also announced during the day.

MAN O' WAR AND SIR BARTON FIT

Great Thoroughbreds to Race for $75,000 Purse on Windsor Track Tomorrow

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 11.—The duel of speed at Kenilworth Park for a purse of $75,000 and a $5,000 cup, in which Man O' War will strive to maintain his title of the "horse of the century" against Sir Barton, the fast Canadian thoroughbred, is only one day off. Both horses are so fast as the best handling cab make them.

The trials have proved that the horses are as fit as can be and that tomorrow's contest will almost inevitably mean the lowering of the record for the mile and a quarter, now held by Sir Barton.

Clarence Kummer, the jockey who will ride Man o' War, will receive a fee of $5,000 for the day's work. Earle Sande, the rider of the rival horse, it is said, will receive a similar amount.

TAD JONES TO SHIFT ABOUT FOOTBALL SQUAD

New Haven, Oct. 11. — Tad Jones will make changes in the Yale squad immediately. The team which was able to outscore the lightweight University of North Carolina only 21 to 0 Saturday, and which was outplayed by the Southerners during the second and third periods, would probably have been defeated had it been facing Boston College, the next rival on its schedule.

WINTHROP LEGION TO ENTERTAIN E. B. INDIANS

The East Boston Indians will meet the strong Winthrop Legion at Ingleside Park, Winthrop, tomorrow at 3 P. M. and a large audience of football fans from both districts is expected to be present.

28th Win for St. John's

The St. John's K. of C. nine won its twenty-eighth victory in the season when the South Boston All Stars were defeated, 5 to 0, at Thorndike Field, East Cambridge.

CADDOCK IN TOP FORM NOW

Meets Franz Gerhardt in Mat Bout at Mechanics Building Tomorrow Night

Looking trained to the minute, Earl Caddock, considered the most scientific wrestler in the world, is in Boston ready for his battle with Franz Gerhardt, the clever Bohemian champion, which will be the feature number of Promoter Tuohey's international carnival in Mechanics Building tomorrow night. Caddock is accompanied by Gene Melody of Omaha, his manager, who says that if his man wins he will immediately post a forfeit to meet Stecker.

Stanley Zbyasko is in rare form for his match with Max Orlando, the Swedish heavyweight, who makes his initial appearance here, which will be another of the big numbers of the program. "Stan" has been training at Old Orchard with his brother Wladek, and the change in his condition from that which he showed on his return from Poland is remarkable.

Both the principal numbers will go to a finish, and will be preceded by a curtain raiser in which "Pinky" Gardner will meet the best available opponent.

SMITH IS LAST HOPE TODAY FOR BROOKLYN FANS

come true, if Speaker's men can knock Smith this afternoon.

Well worn military phrases are being employed freely in this world's championship skirmish. Upon his arrival here last Friday Speaker declared, "We have only begun to fight." Now the Dodgers have their backs to the wall. They have been whittled down by the crushing defeat of a pitcher who was believed to be almost invincible and the confidence is oozing out of them.

Dodgers Pitching Edge Fast Disappearing

The vaunted attack which won for them in Brooklyn was curled up by Jim Bagby yesterday. They didn't believe Bagby could last for nine innings but he did and shut them out for eight innings.

Smith will draw tough opposition today. Speaker is now in position to gamble. The Indians feel they have their rivals on the run and will press every advantage.

Brooklyn's edge in pitching is fast disappearing. The elimination of Grimes, the elevation of Bagby and the scrapping of Cadore, Marquard, Mamaux and Pfeffer in one game are events that tend to equalize the pitching. Coveleskie stands out as the strong man of the series.

Smith must take his place beside Bagby or the Dodgers are done. Wilbert Robinson still has the pitching quantity but Cleveland is showing the quality.

Grimes may not start another game unless the series goes back to Brooklyn. He lasted less than four innings yesterday and will hardly be ready to work tomorrow if the Dodgers should need him. He had plenty of stuff yesterday but was up against the "three to two" proposition all the time.

Crushing Defeat For Brooklyn Team

Clarence Mitchell, a boxman who was hardly mentioned in the advance notice of the series, showed more stuff yesterday than any Brooklyn pitcher who appeared in the two Cleveland games.

Mitchell is a left handed spit ball pitcher. He is smart and knows how to work on batters. He held the American League sluggers in check for four innings yesterday and would not have been scored on but for a wild throw by Jack Sheehan, an infield recruit who was declared eligible for the series only yesterday morning.

Yesterday's defeat was a crushing one for the Dodgers. They did not believe that Grimes could be hit so hard. Before the game [illegible] Miller told Manager Robinson that the Indians would be lucky if they scored.

Had Grimes lost by one or two runs the morale of the Dodgers would not have been shaken so badly. The scoring in seven runs in two innings run drives took all the life out of the Brooklyn players and the game.

Then, too, their failure to score until after they had made twelve hits was discouraging to Robbie's men. Over at the hotel last night Uncle Wilbur Robinson talked bravely, but he was worried.

"I started Cadore on Saturday," said Robbie, "because he looked pretty good and I figured that I should not waste Grimes or Marquard on Coveleskie.

"I figured that Cleveland would hold us to one or two runs if he was as good as he was in Brooklyn, and sure enough he was. But that gave city tied the series and I had my two winners—Grimes and Smith—to shoot back at two of their losing pitchers.

"We were not in a bad spot after Saturday's game, but now we must fight hard. I still think we are going to win."

It Is Nice to Be a Horse

MAN O' WAR, the great race horse, was shipped to Canada in a luxurious special car, to race for a $75,000 purse.

The car is nicely padded. It was properly heated and properly ventilated. Casks of distilled water were taken along for the horse, and special feed.

Seven men attend the animal. Two of them were awake day and night. A little pony, Man o' War's stable companion, was also taken along so the race horse would not get nervous.

It is very nice to be a race horse.

They do not have proper covering, or heat, or ventilation. The water they drink comes out of the city taps, and sometimes carry germs.

They do not have special feed. In fact, many of them do not have much feed special, or otherwise. No one cares how nervous they get. They have no attendants.

Man o' War is a particularly highly developed type of the horse gambling machine. He is prized because he will probably beget other horses which will win money for their owners at the races.

Sick women and children cannot do this.

The athletes this country sent to the Olympic games might have been better off if they had been horses.

They might have been sent to Antwerp in padded stalls, with proper heat and ventilation, and distilled water, and special food and attendants.

Instead they were sent practically by steerage.

'Dope' Amply Justified by Result of Game

By HUGH S. FULLERTON.

Cleveland, Oct. 11.—The Cleveland Indians and Brooklyn Dodgers both struck their normal gaits today and the result was a huge triumph for the Indians and a big one for the grand old dope. The dope indicated that in the second meeting of Grimes and Bagby the Indians would solve the problem of Grimes' spit ball and that Bagby would settle down to his American League gait and allow a lot of hits [illegible] runs out of all proportion.

CHAPTER LXXII.

CYNTHIA PAIGE waylaid her brother in the hall, when, after supper [illegible] dancing had begun again.

"Arthur," she queried, "what were you talking to Robert Ingott about just now? I mean out there [illegible] front door? He never even glanced at me as I passed. It must have been something very entertaining."

"It was," the man said briefly.

"So I surmised."

"Robert's remarks must have been unusually interesting," she observed.

"They were," her brother said gravely, watching the effect of his words. "He was telling [illegible] letters, mailed to this address, [illegible] never received by the person for whom they were intended."

The gray eyes looking [illegible] his did not waver, but the [illegible] were [illegible] to a [illegible].

"They happened to be," Arthur continued, "[illegible] confidential letters."

Then Cynthia spoke. She wondered how she did so. "I can assure you, Arthur, that letters that come to this house are read by nobody but the person to whom they are addressed."

The man felt she was speaking the truth—as far as it went. He preferred to press the matter no further.

"I am glad to know that," he rejoined, turning away.

"Wait, Arthur. There is some thing else I wish to ask you. What were you and John talking about all that time in the library a while ago?"

"About Barbara's wedding. Why do you ask?"

The Shaft Goes Home

"Because, [illegible] as Barbara's aunt, I am naturally interested. Surely there is no harm in my asking a question or two, is there?"

"No harm [illegible] admitted. But, Cynthia, do not ask too many. There are some I might ask you—but not unless I am forced to."

The shaft went home. Without another word, the woman returned to her guests.

It was so late that the young people were preparing to make a move for departure, when, above their chatter, John Brandon's voice was heard.

"Dear friends," he said, "I have a little surprise to announce to you—a surprise for you on our dear young hostess's twenty-first birthday."

There was a sudden silence. All eyes were focused upon him.

"You have heard rumors of her wedding next month," John continued. He was very pale, but very calm. "And, naturally, you have had many affectionate thoughts of the bride-to-be. As the prospective bridegroom has been here so seldom lately, too little thought has been given to him.

"But I know you will all agree [illegible] in congratulating [illegible] most [illegible] the man [illegible] Barbara Paige [illegible] her heart and hand next month—Robert Ingott."

Mary Jameson said afterward that she had never heard such a fuss in all her life. She declared she had always suspected that the affair with John Brandon was only a blind—that there was "something between Barbara and Robert." She was not surprised to learn that the friends of the family had been pressed into service to keep people in the dark until Robert was making enough money to marry on.

She was the only one who had thought this. Congratulations and exclamations of surprise were mingled in a conglomeration of sounds that were deafening.

Through it all Robert and Barbara stood side by side flushed, happy, radiant.

The last guest but Robert and John Brandon had gone when the latter made his adieux.

Barbara had whispered in his ear a few words that had brought a mist to his eyes. Robert's hand-clasp had almost made him wince.

A Solitary Wedding Trip

As he told Barbara goodnight, he glanced at the opal chain bracelet that she wore. Her eyes followed his glance. She started to speak, but he forestalled her.

"You see, my dear," he said gently, "that opals are a lucky stone. May my little gift always bring into your life as much happiness as it [illegible] to you on your birthday."

Arthur followed him to the door and laid his hand on his arm.

"Dear old chap," he asked, "what about you? What will become of you now?"

John smiled whimsically. "Why, Paige, I am thinking of taking that trip out to California that we spoke of a while ago. I never heard of a man who took a wedding trip alone, but I may try it."

Later in his own house he closed his front door and looked about him with a sigh that was not all sadness.

"Well," he muttered, "mother's things shall remain here, just as they have always done. And," with another sigh, "I like mother's things, just as I liked her ways."

Cynthia Paige, pale, but still undaunted, faced her brother with one more question before she went to her room that night.

"John," she demanded, "how did you ever dare take Barbara's affairs into your own hands like this?"

Arthur smiled as he answered. "Perhaps, my dear, I was moved to emulation of your temerity in doing the same thing," he said.

After which Cynthia Paige lapsed into discreet silence.

SHE'S looking through the window and without a telescope and yet the Man in the Moon seems very near to her. In fact she can visualize him so closely that to all intents and purposes he might as well be in the room with her. I wonder what she's saying to him, don't you? But it isn't very hard to guess. Once there was a song about like this: "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon"—No wonder she sees in the features of the faraway guardian of the night her own particular man, and just think there are thousands—millions of girls who have a Man in the Moon, too. Here's luck to all of them.

ABOUT OUR GOOD FRIEND MacDonald

MacDONALD

VARIATIONS—MacDonall, Donaldson, Danielson, MacDonell, Donald, Donillson, Donellson.

RACIAL ORIGIN—Scottish and Irish.

SOURCE—A given name.

BY far the greater number of families bearing this name are of Scottish descent, though originally it would be hard to tell whether the Clan Donald, through which it comes down to us for the most part, would have been more properly classified at that time as Scottish or Irish.

Geographically—that is to say, according to modern boundaries—it would be Scottish. But racially considered from the angle of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries—was just as much Irish.

The MacDonalds, or the Clan Donald, were the rulers of the Western Isles, which they had wrested back from the Norwegians, and at later periods their power was so great as to rival that of the kings of Scotland. Originally, of course, these Gaels had crossed over to the Isles and the Scottish mainland from Ireland.

The clan name, "MacDomhnaill," comes from the given name of "Domhnall," compound of two Gaelic words, "domhan" and "all," signifying "mighty world." Domhnall, or Donald, was a grandson of the chieftain who conquered the Norwegians. One branch of this clan crossed back to Antrim, in Ireland, but the others remained in the Isles and in Scotland.

The name Donaldson, in its various spellings, is, of course, merely the English equivalent for "MacDomhnaill." Danielson is a corrupt form, for the given names of Donald and Daniel, while they sound somewhat alike, are not at all the same. The forms of the name in which the "d" appears are Scottish, leaving the Irish forms a little closer to the original.

Tomorrow—Sterling.

Now's Apple Time

By Loretto C. Lynch

WHAT potatoes are to the vegetable world, apples seem to be to the world of fruit. They are the old stand-by. And right now, in many sections of our country apples are at their best. It is always possible to buy to better advantage in quantity. And so, buy a barrel of apples, even if you have to split it with the neighbors.

Baked apples are among the most digestible forms in which an apple may be eaten. And while apples are often eaten raw, it is a bit better to bake them for the little folks and those of delicate digestion.

Select apples of uniform size for baking. Scrub them and then core them. Remove a strip of skin about an inch in width from the stem end of the apple. Then set the apples in a stone or earthen baking dish out ends up. Fill the hole full or half full of sugar. Some prefer brown sugar, while others use maple or the white sugar.

Corn Syrup

Corn syrup is use; the white or colorless corn syrup being particularly desirable because it does not detract from the flavor of the apple. Raisins are also stuffed in, and sometimes there is a dusting of cinnamon or a squeeze of lemon to give extra flavor.

Unless the apples are especially watery it will be necessary to put half a cupful of water in the dish to start making the syrup. During the process of baking the apples should be basted frequently with this syrup to prevent their burning.

The time of cooking will, of course, vary with the size of the apple, the temperature of the oven as well as the variety of apple. I find the green apples bake much more quickly than the red apples. Others, however, may have a different experience. Care must be taken not to bake the apples too long. It is then they come to the table in a rather unsightly condition.

Baking is all right for perfect apples, but there are apples that are quite imperfect that one might still feel the desire the bake. All imperfections should be removed from these and the apples pared and sliced.

In Layers

Arrange the slices in layers in a baking dish, dusting each layer with sugar and cinnamon or lemon juice. Raisins are sometimes added and some thrifty housekeepers put bits of stale cake between the layers. Cornflakes sprinkled between the layers before baking are especially popular with the kiddies. The dish when done should not be mushy, but rather the slices should show plainly. In a hot oven this dish may be prepared in about twenty minutes.

There are many methods for making the always popular apple sauce. I rather like this method: Wash half a dozen apples and cut them into pieces without removing the skin or core. Put in a stew pot with just enough water to prevent burning. Stew slowly until soft. Press through a coarse strainer and add the desired quantity of sugar. The sauce will be warm enough to melt the sugar.

The less sugar is cooked the sweeter it is. It is therefore a decided economy to add the sugar at the end of the cooking. One level tablespoon of sugar is the amount generally used for each apple in the sauce.

Winning the Heart of a Girl

By Constance Gordon

IT'S one thing to be young and attractive and popular; but it's another thing to be just as young and just as attractive and not at all popular.

"Clever girl, Maribel!" exclaimed Larry Brothers as he crossed the lawn for a game of tennis with Helen Drake.

"Don't be stupid," answered Helen. "You know she isn't. No girl is interesting who doesn't even know what a proposal sounds like. Maribel thinks the men are still sinking to one knee and begging for their first kiss."

Larry struck at a butterfly with his racket. "I imagine most any man would sink to his knees in reverence, and maybe stupefaction, if he really found a girl who reserved her kisses until the psychological moment when he made up his mind to propose. Don't you think Maribel has ever been kissed?"

"I never heard anyone mention having done it," retorted the girl.

"I'd propose myself if I thought for a minute that was the truth. How many men have you kissed, Helen?"

Engaged Twelve Times

"Goodness, don't ask me! How can I remember? I've been engaged twelve times."

"That's the deuce of it. A fellow finds a girl he could like and she tells him to his face that he's the baker's dozen. Darn if I don't think I'll try to marry Maribel."

Helen became thoughtful. Maribel was pretty. It was just possible that Larry Brothers might do some such silly thing.

"Larry, if you don't mind I'm going to call off the game. I'm not up to form anyway today. My arm hurts. Rowed too far yesterday."

The girl sauntered back to the spot where Maribel was sitting on the veranda. Drawing a chair closer to Maribel, Helen began:

"I've quite a compliment for you, dear."

Maribel flushed. She had seen Helen on the court with Larry and long had Larry been her hero, although he had scarcely given her a glance during the Summer.

"Really!"

"Larry thinks you are wonderful," went on Helen. "I think he's going to ask you for a date tonight. Will you let me give you some advice?"

"Well, I hardly know how to say it. You're an awfully pretty girl and well dressed and you dance nicely, but you know you don't get on with the men very well. I wonder if you know where the trouble lies?"

"I'm so glad you spoke of it, Helen. What is the matter with me?"

"Easy to remedy," said Helen softly. "You're a cold-blooded proposition. I don't suppose you've ever let one of them kiss you."

"You mean let them kiss me. Let Larry kiss me?"

"Why don't you think it over? No man is going to propose to a girl from across the room. It simply isn't done."

Maribel thought it over. Just as Helen had said, Larry asked her for an engagement that evening. He took her to dinner in the cool dining room of the club. He told her she was pretty, that she was clever, that she was different. Maribel became radiant under the spell of flattery.

"If you were a different sort of a girl I'd kiss you," said Larry softly.

"You know nothing of what sort I am," answered Maribel, glad that he could not see her face flush.

"Would you let—could I really——"

Larry kissed her without further ado. Then he tried to kiss her again. She sprang from the swing and took a few steps toward the dancers.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "I didn't know I was so repulsive. A kiss is just a kiss. Now there's Helen——"

"Don't talk of her. If it hadn't been for her I'd never have let you do such a thing. She told me if I wanted you ever to ask me for another engagement I'd have to kiss you. But I don't want you ever to ask me again."

Ask Tomorrow

"Well, I'm going to. I'm going to ask you for an engagement tomorrow night. I know why you kissed me, now, and I know why Helen told you to. Only this afternoon I told her I liked you because not every Tom, Dick and Harry could kiss you, and she talked to you in that vein so it would shatter all the dreams I've had about you. But it hasn't shattered them, Maribel. Come back here. I promise I won't kiss you again. Are you crying?" He rose and stepped swiftly to the girl.

"Yes, I'm crying. I'm just a silly little fool, but I didn't want any man to kiss me until"——

She permitted him to seat her in a chair. A bit of lace fluttered before her eyes for a moment and then she was conscious of her hand being imprisoned in his. Larry, on one knee, was asking her to let him prove that he wasn't quite a cad, to let him hope that some day she would give him a kiss of her own accord, without any advice from Helen.

"I really couldn't say, dear," he told her. "This is the first time I ever did it, but you might ask Helen. She seems to be so well versed in proposals. She suggested to me that this was the acceptable way in your sight. Is it?"

Bachelor Girl's Reflections

By HELEN ROWLAND

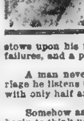
MANY a man waits until after forty to look for real love—and then discovers that his eyes are so dim that he can't tell it from all the glittering imitations.

When a man tells a pretty girl that he is married, she never quite knows, from his manner, whether he is boasting, apologizing or looking for sympathy.



In these days of riding-breeches, overalls, bloomers and one-piece bathing suits, it looks as if a girl were going out of her way to make the "sex-appeal" when she wears skirts.

How is it that a man can get more service out of a waiter with a growl and a fifty-cent tip than a woman can coax from him with a dollar and a smile?

"Experience" is the gentle name which a man bestows upon his follies and mistakes, a woman gives to her sorrows and failures, and a poet to his sins and emotions.

Somehow as soon as a man and woman learn to love each other, they begin to think up ways of making each other suffer for it. Alas, why is it that one can only be "kind" to people for whom one cares nothing at all?

The Law of Proof

"Please, ma'am, father has sent me round to say that your dog, Tatters, killed three of his prize fowls this afternoon," said a youth to an elderly maiden lady. The lady held up her hands in horror. "Tatters," she said, "couldn't do such a thing I'm certain. Go and tell your father that he must have made a mistake." "But father saw him with one of the fowls in his mouth, ma'am." "Tell you father that circumstantial evidence has led many a wiser man astray," said the lady. "Run away and do as I tell you." When the boy returned, some minutes later, he said: "Father's compliments, ma'am, and p'r'haps you're right," he said. "He says I'm to tell you that circumstantial evidence would point to the fact that he shot your dog half an hour ago, but on goin' into the matter, he thinks as how you would find that the poor thing met its end by sudden death."

Making the Most of Life

By Beatrice Fairfax

A MAN of wisdom was asked to make a speech on "How to Make the Best of Life." He arose and began after this fashion.

"I do not even know how to make the best of the two [illegible] the [illegible] committee has placed at my disposal. Life is like playing a violin solo in public and learning the instrument as one goes on. One cannot make the best of such impossibilities."

There's a volume in that paragraph, isn't there? Only don't forget that the man expected to get a laugh in spite of the deep truth underlying his smiling exaggeration of his words.

We all have to experiment in living. First, we have to find out what we'd like to do. Then we must discover how near we can come to its accomplishment.

But we can't plan it all out and make a tentative experiment here and another there and wipe out each one that proves unsatisfactory. Oh—no! We have to carry the results of each "experiment." We have to pay for our practicing.

That's why I feel we ought never sit in judgment on each other. Most of us are trying things out. It is fairly easy to look on at an experiment and with a little safe distance and a little helpful perspective figure out how it is going to end. At least it isn't hard to get an angle on some of the things that don't look right from where we sit. But when right in the midst of a thing it is not so easy to judge.

Learning to live is largely a matter of getting a perspective on things. Even if the art of living has to be practised in public with no chance to go back and unplay a scale and then do it over—still it's possible to learn from one dissonance how NOT to produce another.

No one has to make the same [illegible] twice. No one has to neglect the fact that it's possible to study things [illegible] happened and to figure out how they can be made to [illegible] more advantageously next time.

Not by standing [illegible] letting things guide themselves as [illegible] wills but by studying each situation and determining how to manage the next so it will be better than the last do we grow.

In the final analysis, life is growth. Probably we go toward something finer and better in another life. But if we don't—if there is nothing beyond the here and now, why not make that as splendid as opportunity permits?

Two Highlanders stood looking at the imposing facade of a building in Westminster. The corner stone bore the date in Roman characters "MCMIV." "Look a' that, Jock," said one. Lives to See the Prescription He Wrote in 1892 the Worlds Most Popular Laxative Remedy

DR. W. B. CALDWELL TODAY

Born Shelbyville, Mo., March 27, 1839
Began the manufacture of his famous prescription in 1892

Founder of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the largest selling liquid laxative in the world, long past Biblical old age, but hale and hearty—Still sees patients daily—Wonderful achievement of a "country doctor."

WHEN I started to practice medicine, back in 1875, there were no pills or tablets or salt waters for the relief of constipation, and no artificial remedies made from coal tar.

The prescription for constipation that I used early in my practice, and which I put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid remedy, and I have never had reason to change it. I intended it for women, children and elderly people, and these need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

I am gratified to say that under successful management my prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that over eight million bottles were sold by druggists last year proves that it has won the confidence of mothers whose chief interest is the health of their children.

It is particularly pleasing to me to know that the biggest half of those eight million bottles were bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for grownups. The price of a bottle holding 50 average treatments is sixty cents; such a bottle will last a family several months.

I have never made a secret of what is in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a compound of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin and pleasant-tasting aromatics. These ingredients are endorsed in the U. S. Pharmacopoeia. I consider Syrup Pepsin today in the serious 82nd year of my age, as I did in 1892, the best remedy a family can have in the house for the safe relief of constipation and its accompanying ills, such as headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and I believe if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

TRY IT FREE Send me your name and address and I will send you a free trial bottle of my Syrup Pepsin. Address me Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 515 Washington Street, Monticello, Illinois. Everybody now and then needs a laxative, and it is well to know the best. Write me today.

Constant Pursuit of Pleasure Destroys Ideals of the Heroine in Clever Tale

By Owen Johnson

Author of the Lawrenceville stories, "The Spirit of France," "The Woman Gives," Etc.

"IF they can't break me, or buy me, or bring me into the family within five years, I shall absorb them. It'll be a fight to the finish. They can't touch me inside my own walls. They can't beat my organization or buy my lieutenants. Outside, it's different—raw materials, transportation and credit. But don't worry; I am ready. My alliances are made. That's why Gunther must be my friend."

"But you are going to refuse?"

"I'm going to be cleverer than that. I am going to make him refuse for me," he said, smiling. (He leaned forward, and taking the trumpet, cried cheerily, "To the right, Bingham, and the straight road ahead.") "So we understand each other. You're to play for both of us. It's the time of life to dance and to be extravagant. Do so to your heart's content."

"You need never have any fear."

"Hush," he said, gravely, as though the very thought were treason.

She had no fear herself. The world was an immaterial thing, and pleasure had no form to her ardent imagination—least of all a masculine form. A feeling of great content came over her, and, smiling, she lifted his hand to her lips.

"How he loves me!" she thought.

Dusk Creeping In

The dusk had been creeping in as they had flown over the smooth macadam roads crowded with automobiles. The air had become moist and chill with the threat of rain which hung in the black drapery of the Autumn clouds. Lights had begun to pop out of the darkness, postern lights and home lights, and in the turning of the road she caught flashes of cosy interiors—families gathered at the supper table, mothers with children.

The car slowed down. A flaring light showed the entrance to the drive. A child ran out to swing a gate. Ahead, at the end of the road, which lost itself in a tunnel of shadows under mysterious trees, the house lights were glowing, afloat on the night. She leaned forward eagerly, gay with anticipation, free now to seek without a qualm all the youth and pleasure ahead under the promise of the lights which fluttered at the end of the deep black way.

There was no one to meet them as they descended, and the great house seemed strangely dark and inhospitable. She felt a splash of raindrops as she hurried into the vestibule. The butler, a family watchdog, eyed them with surprise and indecision, and receiving their names, departed.

"You've made no mistake in the day?" she said, surprised, to her husband.

"No."

At the end of a long wait, a footman hastened to throw on the lights, and suddenly brilliant vistas of halls and salons arose before her eyes. The butler returned precipitately, followed by a rapid, noiseless person, who introduced herself as Miss Bane, the housekeeper, and made nervous excuses for their strange reception. Underneath all this was such a feeling of agitation and confusion that Mrs. Forrster, her curiosity awakened, glanced at her husband. But Andrew perceived nothing. He was in admiration before the simple elegance of the baronial entrance, noting every detail, registering each effect which pleased him, making mental comparisons, already perceiving new worlds to attain.

V.

SINCE the morning, the Dellabarre household had been in an uproar, the guests uncomfortably conscious of eavesdropping, Mr. Dellabarre sulking, the children neglected, while Miss Bane ran to the telephone to command or countermand the car, postpone the dinner, and send frantic inquiries for Mrs. Clove, Mrs. Dellabarre's mother, who was sorely needed to restore the peace.

While the servants were in a panic for the security of their Winter positions; while the guests—Mrs. Lightbody, young Dawson, and Laracy—had fled to the country club for lunch; while the children had covered themselves with grease at the garage and were bawling at the top of their lungs; while Mr. Dellabarre was savagely pacing his library with a longing to smash the mantel ornaments, Irma Dellabarre, quietly ensconced on a Recamier chaise longue, by the flowery window of her little morning room, was solicitously brushing the coat of Mon Amour, the Pekinese.

At four o'clock, her mother arrived like a gust of wind that sets every door in the house to banging. Though Mrs. Clove experienced not the slightest anxiety at these periodic summons, she came all in a flutter, prepared to stretch her visit to agreeable proportions by agreeing both with her daughter, whom she idolized, and with her son-in-law—first, because she was sure he would be in the right, and, second, because she had that sense of gratitude which is the lively looking-forward to favors to come.

"My poor darling," she cried, after the first sympathetic embrace, "I was afraid I'd find you in tears!"

"I? No; why should I?" said Irma, rising to put Mon Amour in his pink cradle. Whatever her feminine subterfuges, she never deceived herself in her domestic relations. "I suppose I've been stupid somehow; but, Lord, I can't imagine where!"

"Well, dear, who is it this time?" said Mrs. Clove, drawing off her gloves. From behind she had the figure of sixteen. She dressed in baby pinks and blues, and might have passed for the early thirties—that custom-made age, toward which debutantes and grandmothers now incline.

"Heavens, if he'd only say! But you know Rudy. He's capable of sulking a week before I can get it out of him."

"No; I assure you," said Irma, in response to the unspoken question. "This time, I haven't the slightest idea of whom he's jealous."

The mother, who had come to that age when a compensating Providence replaces the distractions of youth by the arrival of interesting ailments, had a private conviction that these temperamental outbursts had a bilious origin, but as this extreme view had found no favor, she contented herself with an admiring glance.

"My darling child, how can he be angry at anything so lovely as you are?"

Irma smiled. She adored compliments, even from her own mother. She had a sense of the scenic, and even in her own bedroom, kept in the picture. Her charm was of art rather than from natural gift, for while her body was slender and graceful, her head, which was Latin, was striking, though the boldness of her forehead was softened by the deep black hair which had been directed in curling abundance about the temples. Her eyebrows were bold; her nose too aquiline, but her teeth shone brilliantly against the duskiness of her complexion and the brilliant rouge of her lips. What was really striking were the eyes, which were of a thin gray, so clear and so light, that they gave the effect of being as transparent as the negligee which floated lightly about her in a cloud of costly old lace which had cost the price of a season's wardrobe.

"My dear mother," she said calmly. "You don't know Rudy. Appreciate what he's got? Why, he would be delighted if I'd go in flannel wrappers and braid my hair like a dowdy little Hausfrau. I don't see how I stand it. He's getting more and more impossible."

Appreciated Sacrifices

Mrs. Clove, with the memory of twenty lean years in genteel boarding houses, appreciated what sacrifices her daughter had been called upon to make.

"Tell me all about it," she said, patting her hand with sympathy.

"Good heavens, mother, there's nothing to tell! He's been making a scene about everything but the real reason." She hesitated and added, "He began by giving up his hunting trip."

Mrs. Clove did not disguise her surprise. For Mr. Dellabarre to renounce his semi-annual outing was a fact of revolutionary importance.

"As serious as that?"

"Yes."

"It's a man, of course?"

"Of course."

"No, no."

The second negative and the impatient shrug which accompanied it confirmed Mrs. Clove in her suspicions. She rose and went down to the den. Mr. Dellabarre was walking back and forth before the fireplace with such precise little steps that one could almost imagine the creaking of the joints.

"Ah, there you are!" he said, with a sudden treble rise in his weak voice, but, correcting himself, he added ceremoniously, "How do you do? I am very glad indeed to see you."

He gave him hand limply as though he were making her a present of it, and suddenly reddened with embarrassment, for his pride was excessive, and he suffered during these scenes which his timidity prolonged.

He was a gray, perpendicular little man, passing fifty, with a short, drooping mustache, a drooping glance, and a voice which drooped into whispers. He held himself stiffly, and his arms and legs moved on hinges. He dressed in a stiff gray cutaway, which appeared newly starched, square-toed boots, and a made-up tie of pepper and salt, pierced by a fat cameo pin. Eccentric, old-fashioned and furtively shy, there was still a precise dignity about him, which commanded respect, even from the crowd of irreverent youngsters who danced, gambled and paid their court to his wife.

"Tell me all about it, my dear Rudolph," said Mrs. Clove, with the utmost sympathy. She glanced at the table, which was littered with stray sheets of stamps which he had been sorting—a sure sign of a tempest. "What has that poor child been doing now?"

"It's my fault. It's your fault—yes, of course it's your fault," he said in jerky sentences, after a glance at the door. "It's the fault of American education, of the ridiculous way we permit young girls to be brought up. Irma is what we have made her. Yes; but that doesn't help any, and that isn't the point," he added, suddenly perceiving where this would lead him. "She has her side, but I have my side, too, and I tell you now I am going to come to a decision."

In Rising Sentences

This was said in rising sentences, while he continued his precise and mechanical stepping off of the carpet, for he experienced the need of heating up his courage. In all this, there was nothing new. So Mrs. Clove contented

What Has Happened So Far in the Story

"It is very sad."

"What do I count for in my own house?" continued Mr. Dellabarre, in a thin complaint. "Nothing! Do you suppose any one ever comes here as my friend?"

"You mean, my dear Rudolph, what does Irma bring to you in your marriage?" said Mrs. Clove, who knew that, so long as he generalized, they would get nowhere.

"Exactly," said Mr. Dellabarre, for unless he had worked himself up into a passion, his pride made him hesitate before taking a third into his confidence.

"The modern wife is a monster," said Mr. Dellabarre, angrily. "Do you suppose Irma even knows the names of her own servants? Do you? I'm not sure she knows the names of her own children, for all she sees of them."

"Now, Rudolph," said Mrs. Clove, lifting a chubby hand in protest.

"You don't believe it? Doris coughed all last night. Do you think Irma has even heard of it? She isn't a mother. She isn't a wife. She isn't a housekeeper. What does she do? She amuses herself. That is all she thinks of from morning to night, and that is all any of them think of! Well, I'm going to come to some decision."

Mrs. Clove saw that he had no intention of being specific.

"I will speak to Irma," she said, in a tone of decision, wondering if her daughter had given him any real cause for jealousy. "Poor dear, she is dreadfully upset!"

"She should be."

"But has anything happened—anything special?"

"What! Don't you think that is enough?"

"My dear Rudolph, of course I do!" she said, hastily, starting for the door. "I will talk at once with Irma. She certainly should pay more attention to the children. You should ask more of her. You should insist! But, then—you said it yourself—it's the life of the younger generation."

"Well, I've made up my mind," said Mr. Dellabarre rapidly, "and I'm going to make a decision."

Mrs. Clove knew her daughter and her inherent appetite for admiration, but she judged her incapable of going further than a light flirtation, because she understood the modern coquette's need of multiplicity in her adorers.

"He's very excitable."

"I see I shall have to go down," said Irma, who perceived that her mother had learned nothing. She rose. "It is really too humiliating. Kitty Lightbody is here, and will tell it all over New York. I must bring it to a head—a violent scene, that's the only way," she concluded, rearranging her hair in the mirror.

Any of Twenty Men

But you must have a suspicion?"

"Of whom he is jealous? My dear mother, it might be any one of twenty men. No one could be more careful than I. Just look how people talk about Kitty and Gladys Challoner. But a lot of good it does me. If I gave him any reason——" She paused, and the need of preparing her attitude caused her to feel a little real indignation, as she continued: "Do you think my life is an easy one? Do you think it isn't humility to have your husband fuddled regularly every night at 6 o'clock? Do I reproach him? Do I make scenes when he sits at the dinner table staring at his place and has to be helped into the library?" She shrugged her shoulders, glanced at the mirror, rectified the line of her negligee and tripped down to the library.

"My dear Rudolph, we must come somewhere," she said, quietly, "otherwise, I am determined to countermand the dinner and make my excuses to Kitty and the boys. What exactly and precisely do you reproach me with this time?"

Mr. Dellabarre came to a full stop opposite his wife. About her husband there seemed to be always an impassable iron grating which recalled to her that feeling of terror she had experienced when, in her days of poverty, she had faced the dread figure of the cashier.

"You know very well," he said suddenly.

"I know what you have been saying to me all morning and what you've been repeating to mother. Is that all?"

"All!" exclaimed Mr. Dellabarre, who, fired anew, repeated again his theories about the upbringing of the modern woman. Mrs. Dellabarre arranged herself patiently in an armchair and waited until the subject should have exhausted itself. At the end of ten minutes she rose and rang for Miss Bane.

"Miss Bane, kindly call up Mrs. Challoner, the Brackens and the Ponsivals. Inform them that I am obliged to countermand the dinner tonight. Say that we are afraid Doris has the measles. Mr. Dellabarre thinks it unwise to expose others. That's all."

"Now, my dear, every one will know that we have been quarreling," she said, quietly. To her surprise, her husband did not flinch, despite the horror she knew he had of public gossip. She determined, therefore, to force the issue.

"My dear Rudolph, you may save yourself the pains. I know all this by memory. Your description of me is exact. I am a modern wife, if you will, the wife of a rich man. I don't cook; I don't darn the children's socks; I don't haggle over the butcher's bill or the price of eggs. All this is true. But why did you marry me?"

As she intended, this threw him into such a state of fury that he blurted out what most husbands suspect but which they do well not to reveal in the first years of matrimonial discussion.

"Marry you?" he cried. "You know very well I married you because you wanted me to."

She saw the sudden flare-up of jealousy in the strange shut-in nature of the man who still loved her. She had a moment of pity, for she had a kind heart and often returned to those good resolutions she had formed at the altar, when she had passed from the shadow of scheming and privation into the new world of gratification and power. But immediately angered by the justice of his remark, she rang imperiously and gave orders to pack her trunk on the instant.

"That is going too far," she said coldly. "You are quite sober, and you know what you are saying. I shall leave here at once, and shall stay away until you come to your senses. The situation is intolerable."

"It is intolerable," he said, and the hand which he held rigidly before him began to shake, as she had never seen it do before. "I quite agree with you—you had better go and come to your senses!"

Without a Protest

"What! He is going to let me go without a word of protest," she thought, frightened for the first time in his presence. She had an uneasy feeling that what she was facing was not a spasmodic outburst but a definite rebellion. She turned and came back.

"I won't discuss your last insult. You are, at least, a gentleman, and you will realize yourself the indelicacy of such a remark. Now, my dear Rudolph, if you really wished the kind of fireside paragon that you describe, you could easily have had one. There are thousands of them. If you didn't, it is because you wanted just what you have got, a wife of whom you could be proud, a wife to give you a brilliant home, whom you would carry off from other men, a wife who would bring you youth and charm—a wife, in a word, to decorate your house. So much for that. Whatever else you can accuse me of, I have never compromised the dignity of your name. My name has never been handed about, as some other wives we know. I've taken the greatest care that if men paid me attention—and you'd be the first to regret it if they didn't—that no special one should ever be distinguished. This, however, you don't appreciate."

In hearing her speak thus, with all the charm and grace which she knew how to convey to her words, it seemed to him that he was utterly wrong. He stammered out:

"What do I care about that? You can have a hundred men about you."

"Which means it's only one person you object to," said Irma instantly. "In other words, all these diatribes are just subterfuges. You are afraid to say what you think, because you know that it will sound ridiculous. You are jealous again of some one man." He looked at her and then down at the floor. "Well, who is it?" she asked triumphantly, feeling that she had regained her old supremacy.

She knew, but to name him would give the appearance of confession. At the bottom, she knew what he himself did not realize—that the trouble lay deeper, in the impossibility of simulating the love he craved.

"I have not the slightest idea," she said quietly, because in her certainty of victory she always felt a little compassion, and because she was impatient to end this scene which interfered with her projects of the evening. "Well, who is it this time? Is it Tody Dawson or Jap Laracy? Nothing would surprise me. It once was Mr. Challoner—Are you still jealous of him—or Dwight Harcourt or Steve Lewis?"

"No; it's not!" Suddenly he turned and, fixing her with his weak eyes that all at once gathered points of anger, he cried, "I won't have you talked about with Monte Bracken."

"Monte! My dear Rudy, you are insane!" she exclaimed, in excellent bewilderment. "A man I haven't seen for years until last month, whom I have met perhaps six times. No, that's too absurd!"

"Exactly, Monte Bracken!" he said, coming close to her, his face disfigured with jealousy. "The rest I don't care about. But Bracken I bar. The rest are nothing to you, but Bracken you cared for, and he cared for you." All at once his hand, which was trembling with emotion, closed over her arm, and she felt the sharp pinch of his fingers. "Do you understand now?—I forbid your coupling your name with Monte Bracken's. I forbid it!"

Given Over to Passion

He had never before laid his hand on her. It was the first time she had seen him completely given over to his passion. Despite herself, she felt her face go red as though, before this revelation of her husband, she had experienced a sudden guilt.

A knock broke in on the tension of their attitudes. She drew away hastily.

Miss Bane, sir."

He glanced at his wife nervously, fingered the buttons of his coat, drew a long breath, and said impatiently.

"Well, why don't you come in, then?"

"Please, Madame, Mr. and Mrs. Forrester have just arrived—what shall I do?"

Mr. Dellabarre scowled, hesitated and looked to his wife, in utter perplexity.

"There is only one thing to do," she said quietly, seizing the providential opportunity. "Mr. Dellabarre will go down and explain about Doris. You will have to send them away somehow."

"No, no—we can't do that," said Mr. Dellabarre hastily, shrinking at the thought, for once his anger had shot up, it quickly subsided. "Wait a moment, Miss Bane—wait a moment, wait a moment outside. It's annoying, very annoying, but we can't send them away."

He began to walk up and down the room in his stiff perpendicular way, while Irma watched him from the corner of her eye. To her, it was a revelation. What he had done in an access of jealousy she forgave, as all women forgive such tributes. In the emptiness of her own sentimental experience, it even gave her a thrill to realize that the man who disposed of her could love her to the point of doing her harm.

"All the same, he looked at me as though he wanted to kill me," she said, staring at him.

All at once he turned.

"Well, now what's to be done, Irma?" he said petulantly, looking to her for assistance. He hesitated a moment. "You know we can't send them away. That is not possible. That isn't done!"

"No; that isn't done, and other things aren't done, either," she said sternly.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" she said, shaking her head and smiling.

"Please treat as serious what I've said," he said sullenly, his glance traveling along the carpet. "I know very well I can't make you love me. You never have. Put that aside—yes, put that aside. You can go your way—up to a certain point—but be careful, Irma, be very careful."

For a moment his eyes rose to hers, and the sudden leap of suffering and passion she saw there brought her for the first time in her easy, superficial existence, a real emotion—a fear—a genuine fear of her husband.

VI.

MEANWHILE Mrs. Lightbody with the boys in company with the two Miss Teakes who had returned with them for tea, were amusing themselves in the great baronial sitting room during the continued absence of their hostess.

"What can we do?" said Mrs. Lightbody, a plump, rolling blonde of resolute youthfulness, who was in constant state of anxiety before the pursuing problem of being amused. "Let's cut in for a hand of bridge."

"No, Kitty, dear," said Tody Dawson impertinently: "I will dance with you, I will amuse you in any other way, but I will not play bridge with you—you are entirely too expensive—and I need the money."

Laracy, who was at the piano, rattling up and down the keys, emerged from behind the keyboard: a podgy, placid, smiling, flat-faced figure, affecting tight check trousers, glowing socks, and fancy waistcoats.

"Did Kitty propose bridge again?" he said, with equal impertinence, referring to some disaster of the night before. "She should be stood in a corner."

"You funny, odd boy! You know I don't play half badly now."

"Not half badly, entirely so," said Laracy. "Well, Tody, if we've got to amuse her, better to keep her dancing."

"Yes, that keeps her out of breath," said Dawson, getting up with the air of a martyr. He was a sky-scraping type of youth, with long face and rising yellow hair, which, after four years of college education, flowed back without a flurry from the untroubled calm of his well-pleased expression—a beau ideal of that tailorable figure which advertising artists depict in heroic postures, resting on tennis rackets or golf sticks.

"How about thumb-wrestling?"

"Oh, I dote on that!" said Mrs. Lightbody, clapping her hands and, turning to the colorless and impassive Miss Teakes, she explained, in excited phrases, the principles of this latest parlor trick. "My dear, he's simply wonderful; he can wrestle you with one hand and me with another, blindfolded, and beat us both. It's excruciatingly funny."

"T. Y. K.," said Dawson, bowing, and meaning, in the abbreviating trick of the day, "Thanking you kindly."

"Saying which, Lord Ronald inclined his noble brow and suffered his beautiful violet eyes to be bandaged," said Laracy, drawing forth a red-and-yellow handkerchief amid the titters of an appreciative audience.

Dawson and Laracy belonged to that new variety of household pet which supplements the absence of hard-worked husbands in society. A woman of fashion counts from two to ten of the variety in her train, who fetch and carry, run small errands, adore her in a public, harmless way, accompany her to the theatre or opera, surround her at the dansants and invent a hundred amusing tricks to save her from the necessity of reading and other forms of boredom. Wise in their generation, they seldom make blunders, knowing that they are admitted to intimacy only on the basis of absolute docility, and acquiring the knowledge of worldly values, they wait patiently under such patronage the opportunities of what is called a successful marriage. Dawson and Laracy were unusually gifted. They played in masterly fashion all games of chance where a friendly dollar could be sought. They formed a team, which imitated the latest comic-opera favorites. They spoke a jargon of their own. They danced like professional dancers, with really the most remarkable agility, and, from morning to night, kept up a running patter of story, anecdote, repartee, and picturesque slang which made easy the task of the most desperate hostess.

Return From Polo

About five o'clock, the older men began to return from polo practice. Tea at the Dellabarre's was an institution in Chilton society, which, like many similar societies, was formed on feudal lines, congregating around one or two established families, with their castles, their retainers, and their adherents who, by some mystery of hidden economy, attached themselves to the leaders, imitated their luxuries, and scrambled desperately to marry their children advantageously before the impending day of accounting arrived.

By the time the Forresters had unpacked and descended, the great living room had filled up with casual guests, a few of the men in riding breeches, the women in gaily-colored sweaters and striped skirts. From the landing of the winding stair, Amy looked down on the great vaulted room, paneled in brown, with pleasant regions of shadows and lights, and, at the end, a great fireplace with lighted logs. A group was gathered about a card table, another about the shiny decanters, while Tody Dawson, thin and active, was pirouetting, his arms lightly in the air, exaggerating the bend of his shoulders as he turned in sapoere. A group watched this demonstration of the newest step with the solemnity of a religious contemplation. Somewhere in the obscurity of the deep baronial living room, Laracy was pounding out the rhythmic measure with youthful enthusiasm. The music ended with a crash, and at the charming appearance of Amy at the balustrade, there was a sudden hush of curiosity.

What N. Y. Critics Say of the Year's Best Photoplay

We do not propose to tell you the story. We propose to ask you to go to the Criterion to see what a combination of earnest people can do in a motion picture. It is of "Miracle Man" class. —S. Jay Kaufman, New York Globe.

All that could be wished for in a picture.—New York Evening World.

"Humoresque" to my mind is the second best picture ever shown on Broadway, and, although "The Miracle Man" continues to head the list, I am of the opinion that "Humoresque" carries as much if not more, appealing quality.—B. F. Holzman, New York Evening Mail.

It is doubtful if a better picturization has been placed on the screen in a decade.—New York Tribune.

The spectator feels himself carried into the life of which the persons in the play are an integral part. The power of the motion picture thus to create atmosphere is not often so emphatically and delightfully demonstrated.—New York Times.

Untold Wealth Discovery of America Brought World

Though the world is full of evil and oppression; though men are dying in thirty-odd wars while the League of Nations nods helplessly; though millions of men lie under the sod, the irretrievable sacrifices of an alleged contest to make the world safe for democracy; and though democracy after the victory under that shibboleth has received more wounds than in any equal period before; though statesmen have proved faithless and blind and peoples indifferent and have denied the truth that we are all our brother's keepers, yet this sable cloud has its silver lining.

The world progresses steadily. The world never turns to the setting sun the same face that she turned when He rose. Every day that the sun sets His rays gild a different and a better world in many important respects.

Tomorrow is a holiday. We celebrate tomorrow the discovery of America. By that discovery we added to the world about one-third of the earth's surface of dry land and untold wealth and marvelous contributions to the arts and sciences of mankind.

Stand on any of the highways of the State tomorrow and watch the automobiles go by. They will pass you upon any of the principal roads of the State between 9 in the morning and 6 at night in one continuous procession, so close together that it is difficult to cross the street at any moment of the day. They are automobiles of every kind and nature. They contain people on pleasure bent of all descriptions and conditions of life. They are carrying them all into the open spaces of the country, bringing health and pleasure to at least half the population of the Commonwealth.

It was only a few years ago when none but the rich could get out of the city on a holiday. Now almost everybody can go, for there are so few who either do not have an automobile or who has no friend who has one.

Flying machines are now as common a sight as automobiles were twenty years ago. One of our great railroads has been electrified and the first reports of the experiment show it to be an extraordinary success.

We can talk across the continent by wires or by wireless. We can navigate under the ocean, on the ocean and in the air above the ocean.

Our trouble is that the arts and sciences have outstripped our form of government and we waste the immense wealth which the advance in arts and sciences have created for us. We are too individualistic. We lack the habit of co-operation. We lack the understanding of its great promise. For example, there is an automobile in Massachusetts for every five of our population. That is enough for every man, woman and child to enjoy automobiling all they want if we could co-operate.

Few automobiles, if any, are used to one-third of their capacity. Those who really cannot afford to keep an automobile and who worry about the expense of it and let that worry destroy the fullness of the pleasure it is capable of giving, could enjoy it fully if they could arrange with their friends to share in its use. Many an owner of an automobile would like the company of a friend on a trip who cannot afford it because with it goes the absurd convention that as a host he must pay all his friend's expenses. If it were the custom on the other hand to whack up expenses, how many more of our people who do not own automobiles would enjoy them and how many more who do own them would enjoy them more.

Law of Supply and Demand Excuse of Profiteers

The American agrees with District Attorney Gallagher in the criticism of the contention of one of our contemporaries that the government ought not to attempt to interfere with the operation of the law of supply and demand. United States District Attorney Gallagher dismisses the argument as absurd without giving the reason therefor.

The truth is that those who object to the government's attempts to prevent skyrocketing in the cost of living always invoke this law of supply and demand and call upon the gods and the people to protect the sacred law.

But those who invoke it are the very ones who are violating it, and what they are appealing against is the attempts of the government to punish them for violating the law. Those who shove up the price of sugar without justification or of any other necessary of life without justification are the ones who are tampering with the law of supply and demand.

The law of supply and demand is a theoretically perfect law, but what may seem like a meddling with the law of supply and demand is usually merely the prying loose of the tendrils of some octopus that has a strangle hold on the law of supply and demand.

Take for example the housing condition here. The Boston Herald, superficially invoking the law of supply and demand, would say that we have a shortage of houses and that, therefore, the supply having diminished and the demand either remaining constant or increasing, the price necessarily and naturally goes up. Therefore, the price is the result of the sacred law of supply and demand and we should not attempt to correct it by the law. But this is not the whole truth.

The present rent levels are not the result of an untrammelled law of supply and demand. War necessities compelled us arbitrarily to meddle with the supply and to reduce it. We took labor and materials from their natural channels, namely, keeping the increase of building in step with the increase of demand for them, and we converted these materials and this labor to the work of destruction in war. To that extent, therefore, as a government we interfered with the law of supply and demand by reducing the supply and, therefore, it is perfectly proper and no violation of the law of supply and demand for the government to put back what it took out. Since it reduced the supply by government action, now to increase the supply by government action, whether wise or unwise, would at least not interfere with the law of supply and demand.

Whenever you see anybody shriek about the law of supply and demand be suspicious that what is troubling the gentleman is not the law of supply and demand, but the fact that some intelligent and efficient public official is getting after him for violating the law of supply and demand.

Jimmy and His War Bride

Copyright, 1920, by International Feature Service, Inc.

Our hero, his bride and the fourteen children are sitting at home in hopes that some of the neighbors will call. They want the bride to be accepted by the best people and taken into society. But nobody has yet came. Suddenly the door opens and two very rough guys enter. They have been sent to help our hero. It was a moment of terror. Yeah, you never know what's going to happen; one minute you're all right and the next your name is Dennis.

More Truth Than Poetry

Opportunity

By S. E. KISER

HE heard a knock upon his door,
And listened, trembling, where he sat;
He had not waited long before
He heard again the rat-a-tat;
Then, standing at a crack to peer,
Suspiciously he asked: "Who's here?"

"MAKE haste! I've come," the caller said,
"To lead you where the ways are fair."
Remembering the word, "Beware!"
"First let me see the proof," said he,
"That you are Opportunity."

SHE did not linger to reply,
But left him nibbling at a crust,
And called another, passing by,
Who hastened with her full of trust;
She led him long and far and fast,
And gave him wealth and fame, at last.

ANOTHER knock was heard one day
By him who once had stood in doubt;
"Make haste!" he heard the caller say,
And eagerly he hurried out,
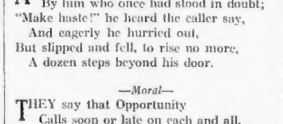
A dozen steps beyond his door.

—Moral—

THEY say that Opportunity
Calls soon or late on each and all,
But who knows when to heed her plea
Or turn a deaf ear to her call—
To follow gladly where she goes,
Or slam the door against her nose?



WHAT COULD HE EXPECT?

A Nebraska farmer who advertised for a wife, specifying that he preferred good health and strength to beauty, hasn't received a solitary answer. The strong, healthy ones, we take it, are all busy doing barefoot dances.

WOULD BELIEVE ANYTHING

Some people believe that peace would be prevailing in Europe if the United States had gone into the League of Nations. But that isn't strange. Some people think you can get children to be satisfied by giving them everything they want.

Letters to the Editor

A Former Dupe

Editor Boston American:

I wish to express to you as an American citizen my deep gratitude and complete approval of your daily editorials and your splendid cartoons. Being one of past dupes of Woodrow Wilson and his gang, it is a great relief to one's feelings to read a daily American.

I firmly believe that Woodrow Wilson has put civilization back fifty years. No crime could be greater unless it should be the success of the League of Nations.

Want Full Freedom

Editor Boston American:

In reply to H. N. Bell, I would say that in Scotland there are a minority who desire full freedom for that country. There seems to be some there, at least, that have not lost completely their love for freedom that Bruce upheld. Ireland, of course, need not thank England for the superiority of her climate and agriculture. At present Ireland sends no representatives to the English Parliament, that is, no representatives from the majority of its voters, which is now over 80 per cent. If the exploiting class in Scotland can fool the voters of that country into the belief that they are better off under the union with England, that's Scotland's own business, which is not Ireland's business. Her idea of freedom is to cut the painter and be independent.

A SCOT.

Chances

UNCLE SAM has 2,973,774 square miles of dry land, enough to give every inhabitant 180 acres. Grant that three-quarters of it isn't first class. That would still leave forty-five acres apiece, and a good intensive tiller of soil can live comfortably on ten acres.

This isn't an appeal for a division of land, as in Russia. It is the prelude to a story.

Ten years ago a Russian immigrant landed in Northwestern Nebraska without a cent. He worked for wages until he had saved $120. Then he leased a farm and started raising pigs. The town banker today rates him as worth $150,000—all of it fairly earned.

The West is full of such instances. The South soon will be. Ours is still the land of opportunity for those willing and able to work, think, save and dare.

HER HUSBAND told me.
AND HE says it's true.
AND I have his word.
SHE'LL NOT be angry.
IF I put it here.
AND SHE'S just arrived.
FROM A little town.
IN THE Middle West.
THE WHENCE he came.
AND THEN went back.
AND BROUGHT her here.
AND ON the day.
THAT SHE arrived.
HE TOOK her off.
TO THE little flat.
THAT WAITED her.
AND HURRIED home.
AND SHE was there.
WITH REDDENED eyes.
AND SALTY tears.
AND IT appears.
FROM WHAT he says.
THAT WHEN he left.
SHE LOOKED about.
AND FOUND the hole.
WHERE THE dumbwaiter is.
AND SHE thought it a cupboard.
AND IT just so happened.
THE WAITER was there.
AND IT wobbled a lot.
AND SHE got some nails.
AND A lead paper weight.
AND NAILED the waiter.
SO IT wouldn't wobble.
AND FIXED it up.
WITH NICE clean paper.
AND TOOK some stuff.
FROM A crowded cupboard.
AND PUT it in.
AND THEN the janitor.
OR SOMEBODY else.
PULLED ON the rope.
AND TORE it out.
AND DRAGGED it down.
WHILE SHE stood there.
AND THEN she guessed.
WHAT IT was for.
AND SHE cried all day.
TILL HER husband came home.
AND WENT down stairs.
AND GOT the stuff.
AND THAT'S the story.
IT'S ALL there is.
THERE ISN'T any more.

I THANK you.

CLIMBING LADDER OF OUR LIKES

By The Spectator

THE most irritating, maddening trait of character in any one we love is his hopeless acceptance of his likes and dislikes as final. It means that he is closed, sealed, boxed and battened and cannot grow. It is death in life. It is intellectual and spiritual suicide.

The young girl walks through the art gallery and deals out her judgments with aggravating finality. She likes this; that does not appeal to her. She sweeps the judgment of centuries airily aside. Does it ever occur to her that her main concern there ought to be to learn what to like and how to like it?

The boy comes home from school and announces that he does not like history. He takes to botany, yes, but cannot abide French. His sister likewise informs us that she is fond of music, but does not care for chemistry. And flabby-minded parents receive these statements as the decrees of destiny! Does it ever occur to them that children go to school to learn how to like the best things?

Inspire Tastes

For teachers and textbooks are not supplied to young folks merely to furnish them with facts. The main purpose is to furnish them with tastes.

If a man likes to sit around in the back room of a saloon and play pinochle and does not care for going to see "As You Like It," it is something to be ashamed of and something that can be helped. If he prefers the vaudeville to hearing a lecture by Griggs or Zeublin, it is not because the fates have decreed it; he cannot say truthfully that it is no fault of his. For it is his fault. Let him learn better!

It is certainly worth your while to cultivate high tastes. For they make your spirit strong against the petty cares and distractions.

Many Desires

The difference between a naked savage in the Australian bush and a man who has gone through our schools is not that one wears a loin cloth and the other a frock-coat, nor that one eats raw meat and the other cooked meat, but that one has few desires and the other has many and complicated desires. Civilization means the development of the race's wants. The noble redman that roamed the Connecticut Valley at the time of Miles Standish lived desired only to eat, drink and kill. The present inhabitants of those regions want high schools, libraries, theatres and churches.

This old world mounts slowly up the ladder of desires. Still, it mounts. We want more justice and less cruelty than we did in the days of Richard Coeur de Lion. The millions of America want schools. Those of the middle ages wanted what is well expressed in the verse of Bishop Still:

Whether it be new or old"

Once-Overs

GET RID OF YOUR GROUCH

If there is a family jar in your home don't slam the door of your room and go to bed where you lie awake with angry thoughts coursing through your brain.

If anything happens at office or shop which angers you don't take your grouch home to think of all evening.

Doing this, if you are like most mortals, means your main thought will be revenge.

Your thoughts will be of a get-even nature.

The time between retiring and passing off to sleep is a good time to make plans for success and for next day's work to improve it, but a particularly dangerous time to plan evil against anyone because the mind seems to be able to suggest more diabolical methods of action at night.

Use your valuable thinking time to good purpose.

DIFFICULT TO GRASP "WHY" OF THINGS

By Damon Runyon

THERE are a great many things about this life which I do not understand.

Not long ago I read a short item in the paper about how a little three-year-old boy, playing in the street, was struck by a truck, and both his arms were torn off.

The child died some hours later. That same day, as I walked along Broadway, I counted fifteen lying, thieving men apparently in the best of health, and prosperous.

Many Crooks

I saw among others a fellow who is known to have ruined a good girl. I saw another who got his financial start through operating a line of "scribe" in a Western town. I saw still another who cheated his former business partner out of all his money.

This, then, is something I do not understand:

Limited Scope

I suppose some people can explain that and similar cases to me. I suppose my lack of understanding is due largely to the limited scope of my thought.

I am not a profound fellow. I would rather beat a serious idea into a laugh any time, if possible. But when I see worthy, God-fearing people trying to do the right thing and meeting with misfortune, while some wicked person alongside them thrives on iniquity, I am greatly confused.

Stars and Stripes

Men follow the beaten path because the thorns in it have been brushed aside by those who went before.

Do you remember away back when folks laughed at Salvation Army workers who stood on street corners and sang and prayed?

Harvard professors have received a 20 per cent. increase in their salaries, but some of them, it is reported, continue to consider the advisability of taking up bricklaying.

A faux pas is when a husband, who persistently fails to notice that his wife has something new in the apparel line, remarks to her that he noticed Miss Soandso wearing a beautiful new hat.

We never see a whiskered chin without remembering that there a crowd of germs may congregate, while, perched on some convenient hair, a Johnny germ may wink at Sare while cooing fondly to his mate.

They tell us we have reached the turning point in the price of living. It may or may not be the turning point, but there can be no doubt about the presence of the point.

Public speakers who find it necessary to refer frequently to "the treaty of Versailles" thank their stars that the peace conference wasn't held in Hrudlesscow or some of those other Russian towns.

Some day there will be a candidate for President who will not spend one penny in his campaign, but who will make his appeal direct to the people—and he will be defeated by an overwhelming majority.

A Young Logician

"I do try awfully hard."

"But you don't succeed very well."

"Why, mother, just think how bad I should be if I didn't try at all."
